AN ESSAY UPON THE EXECUTION of the LAWS AGAINST IMMORALITY AND PROPHANENESS.

By JOHN DISNEY, Esq;

With a PREFACE, addreſs'd to Her Majeſty's Juſtices of the Peace.

And thou Son of Man, be not afraid of them, neither be afraid of their Words, though Briars and Thorns be with thee, and thou doſt dwell amongſt Scorpions: Be not afraid of their Words, nor be diſmay'd at their Looks, though they be a rebellious Houſe, Ezek. ii. 6.

THE PREFACE,

Addreſſed to all that have the Honour to ſerve Her Majeſty in the Commiſſion of the Peace.

Gentlemen,

WITH all Reſpect imaginable I offer you the following Sheets: But as I am very ſure that the Cauſe there pleaded is the Cauſe of GOD, you muſt give me leave to inſiſt with more than ordinary aſſurance to be heard. What this Eſſay propoſes to you, is no more than the due Execution of the Laws againſt Debauchery and Prophaneneſs; to employ your Authority for the Service of our Prince and Country, the Safe-

Safety and Proſperity of every private Subject, the Honour of God, the public Credit of Religion, and the eternal Happineſs of Mankind. And ſurely a Propoſal of this Nature deſerves at leaſt a patient, equitable, and unprejudiced Hearing. What Objections may lie againſt it, I have endeavoured to anſwer in the Body of the Book; and have propoſed alſo ſome Arguments, which ſeemed to me of the greateſt Force, to prove our Obligation in this Point. But it deſerves to be ſomewhat more largely conſidered, how far the public Intereſt of Society and Civil Government are embarqued in the Execution of thoſe Laws; what fatal Miſchiefs iſſue from the Neglect of this Part of our Duty; and what Advantages both to Prince and People from the faithful Diſcharge of it.

That Debauchery and Prophaneneſs unreſtrained by the Magiſtrate draw down the Vengeance of God upon a Nation, is propoſed as an Argument in the following * Eſſay; and an Argument it is, that can never be too often repeated, or too ſeriouſly laid to Heart. Let us not flatter

our ſelves, that theſe things will be overlooked, or that they are only perſonal Crimes: For if the Laws that are in Force againſt them lye by to ruſt for want of Execution, through our Neglect, who have the Power in our Hands to curb Enormities, they are not only perſonal, but national too, and God will account with us as a Body politic, for ſuffering the exorbitant Impudence of Vice. Shall I not viſit for theſe things, ſaith the Lord? Shall not my Soul be avenged on ſuch a Nation as this? Whereas if we diſcharge the Severity of the Laws upon them, we not only preſerve our Country from Ruine, but fix it upon a better Eſtabliſhment than before; for the Work of Righteouſneſs ſhall be Peace, and the Effects of Righteouſneſs Quietneſs and Aſſurance for ever. Let us but purge our ſelves of this accurſed Thing, the Guilt of popular and unpuniſhed Vice; our * Armies ſhall proſper, and our Trade ſhall flouriſh; The Earth ſhall yield her Encreaſe, and God even our God ſhall bleſs us. But Iniquity is the fatal Hindrance of all Bleſſings public or private, the Source of all Calamities and Diſorders; ſo that that indulging that, we muſt deſtroy our Country.

The Temperance, Frugality, and other Virtues of the Romans, were the Support of their Common-wealth, and raiſed them to the Empire of the World: But as ſoon as the Lewdneſs and Luxury of Greece got footing amongſt them, 'tis wonderful to obſerve how their Power declined abroad, and Factions and Civil Wars diſtracted them; and in courſe of Time, their State was intirely overthrown by the more virtuous (tho' withal the more barbarous) Nations of the North. The Reaſon is eaſie to conceive: For Luxury and Debauchery (as their natural Effect) debaſe the Genius of a People, diſſolve them to Effeminacy and Cowardice, by chaining them down to their Pleaſures, and diverting them from that generous Spirit which is neceſſary to the Preſervation of the Public.

Beſide the Injuries of this kind, how many Families have been brought to Beggary or a Goal, by the mere Expenſiveneſs of Vice! While the Labourer conſumes his Time and his Wages in Tipling and Drunkenneſs, the

the Tradeſman his Profits, the Officer his Salary, and the Gentleman his Eſtate, in Taverns or lewd Houſes, in Gaming, or keeping Whores; 'tis no Wonder that Poverty over-runs the Nation; that Taxes are ſo generally complain'd of, and with ſo much Difficulty paid; that Trade is neglected, Markets fail, our Gazettees are fill'd with Commiſſions of Bankrupt, and our Priſons with Debtors. This cuts the very Sinews of the Government, when that which ſhould ſupport it, is drain'd before hand into the private Channels of Luxury by the Subject, and little or nothing remains to bear the Charge of its Defence againſt the common Enemy; and not only ſo, but it ſtands further expoſed to Tumults and Rebellions at home; for Poverty breeds Diſcontent amongſt the People, who are ready enough to charge their Hardſhips upon bad Times and the Government; tho' in Truth they proceed from their own undoing Vices; Diſcontent puts them upon affecting Change, and ſows the Seeds of every great Diſturbance to the Public. Let me add, that thoſe who are practiſed to diſregard their own Health and Life, Eſtate and Reputation, for the Enjoyment of their beloved Debaucheries, are in a fair way to bid Defiance to the Gallows, to venture upon capital Crimes, and ſuch as are immediately deſtructive to common Peace and Honeſty; as Robbery, Murder, and the like, either to relieve the Poverty which their Vices have brought upon them, or to open their Way to new Opportunities of Luſt; or becauſe they have hardened themſelves beyond the Fear of Death, and reſolve, according to their own lewd Proverb, upon a ſhort Life and a merry One. And therefore 'tis to the Advantage of Society to have thoſe Crimes vigorouſly puniſhed and ſuppreſſed, that theſe may be prevented.

The Growth of Perjury, which (as I have ſhown in this * Eſſay,) is very much to be charged upon the Cuſtom and Levity of prophane Swearing, is too viſible a Miſchief to the Public to be forgotten, and by the Execution of the Laws may in ſome good degree be checked and prevented.

Let me further obſerve, that our Negligence in ſuppreſſing Debauche-

ry and Prophaneneſs leads the Body of the People to ſuch a Careleſneſs of Religion, as may in time clear the Way for the Return of Popery. Allow Men in their Vices, and you make them hopeful Proſelytes to Rome. For (1) Ill Men can be of no Religion upon true Principle; the Church of England and of Italy are all one to them; whatever Zeal they pretend to upon ſome Occaſions for our Church, 'tis all but a mere lifeleſs Theory, which Education, Faſhion, and Intereſt, have taught them. I will undertake to affirm, that they know nothing at all of the Church of England, who think their own Debaucheries reconcileable to her Doctrine. And ſince theſe Men are Proteſtants upon ſo ſlight a Bottom, ſhould there happen a Revolution in favour of Popery, their oily Conſciences would preſently be on the Side that's uppermoſt. But (2) there is ſomething peculiar in the Church of Rome that flatters the extravagant Liberties and Vices of Mankind. It has the Reputation of putting Men into an eaſier way than ordinary to Heaven, without the Trouble of parting with their Sins;

let them enjoy their Debaucheries and welcome, if they will but go to the Coſt of an Indulgence, or take Abſolution at the Hour of Death, or leave ſomewhat to the Prieſts to pray them into Heaven afterwards. Now certainly it is the Intereſt of wicked Men to like this way; the Diſſoluteneſs of their Lives muſt needs prepare them to embrace a Religion that is ſo much to their purpoſe; and (fooliſh as it is) the Intereſt of their Vices makes them ſwallow every Day as great Abſurdities. Therefore if we would effectually keep out Popery, Care ſhould be taken for the timely Suppreſſing of Vice.

I will add another Obſervation, Gentlemen, in which your ſelves are immediately concerned. By the Neglect of putting the Laws in Execution, the Authority of the Magiſtrate is rendred contemptible. For why is ſo much Reverence paid you by ill Men, but becauſe they know you have by Law the Power to puniſh them? If you neglect to puniſh, they'll forget to fear you; you make your ſelves their Equals, and Contempt will follow. But 'tis not your your Honour alone that is concerned in this; for if Magiſtrates become contemptible, the Public muſt ſhare both in the Diſgrace and Miſchief, and very deeply too. It will be no wonder if the Soldiery break thro' all the Diſcipline of War, and fall to Mutiny and Diſorder, when they have learnt to deſpiſe the Officers that ſhould command them. A ſhort-ſighted Perſon may eaſily ſee to the End of Government, when the Laws are neglected, the Magiſtrate has loſt his Authority with the People, and every Man's own Diſcretion is to be his chief Reſtraint.

The only medium of Government, is the Preſcribing of LAWS; and that which makes a Law to be regarded, is the PUNISHMENT it threatens; if therefore you neglect the Penalty, you diſarm the Law, and doing that, the Power of Government diſſolves, and by Conſequence the State is in Danger of being broke to pieces in Confuſions. This is in general the Effect of ſlighting the Execution of good Laws, and it is particularly the Caſe with relation to thoſe which I am now ſpeaking of. Let them lye dormant, and you notoriouſly ſtrengthen and encourage Vice, till at length it will come to ſuch a Head as to be paſt control, and Magiſtrates themſelves will no longer have it in their Power to ſuppreſs it.

Give me leave now to add a Word or two further, of the Advantages that may be expected both by Church and State from the due Execution of theſe Laws.

I told you before, that it prevents the Growth of Perjury; that it puts a Stop to the Ruine of many Families; that it contributes to the Vigour, Health, and generous Spirit of a Nation; and that it wards off the Judgments of God, which firſt or laſt will break upon a debauched and impious People. Beſide theſe, it engages Magiſtrates themſelves to live regularly, which is a great Bleſſing in their Example, and a great Confirmation of their Authority; for that Man muſt be very ſhameleſs and hardned, who practiſes himſelf the Vice he puniſhes in another. By this too we ſhall be be better able to truſt Mankind in our common Dealings with them. The Suppreſſion of thoſe extravagant Vices that waſte Eſtates, and end in Poverty and Ruine, tends evidently to ſecure public Commerce and Credit: For how many debauch'd lewd Gentlemen have we ſeen under a ſplendid Figure and Appearance, who have ſuddenly been ſo broke as to be worſe than nothing? Their Port in the World, and the Reputation of their Eſtates, have brought the Mercers and the Markets to give them Credit, till being no longer able to keep their Ground, they are unexpectedly blown up, and are no where to be ſeen but in the Shop-Books or a Goal. This is the natural Effect of Extravagance, as that is of Vice; and therefore the Suppreſſion of Vice muſt contribute very much to ſet a Tradeſman eaſie: For where Temperance and good Order preſerve a Fund of Wealth, (tho' there ſhould be none of Honeſty) the Law will find him a Way to recover what is juſtly owing him; his Debt is not to be accounted deſperate.

Let us conſider yet further the Advantage it will be to the Chriſtian Religion and the Church of England. It gives new Life to the Friends of Virtue and Goodneſs, who have been too long run down by the overbearing Inſolence of Vice, to appear more openly in their Defence. The Times were come to that unhappy paſs, that many well-diſpoſed Perſons, affrighted by the general Ridicule of all that's ſerious, durſt hardly be known to be virtuous, or ſo much as ſpeak of Sin and Duty, of God and Goodneſs, without a Bluſh: But the Execution of theſe Laws has already very much encouraged, and will further encourage them, wherever it prevails, to declare themſelves more freely, to reprove with Boldneſs, and defend the common Cauſe of Virtue with the Spirit that becomes a Chriſtian. And ſo much the more as the Vigour of thoſe Laws is ſupported by our Faithfulneſs, that Courage of good Men will encreaſe, and Shame will be fix'd where it ought to be, in the Countenance of the Prophane and Vicious.

Nor

Nor is only a Guard to the Honour of Religion, but a real and very great Aſſiſtance to its Progreſs, and upon ſeveral Accounts a moſt happy ſtep to Mens Salvation. When they are poſting with looſe Reins to Hell, the Execution of the Laws upon them is a very ſeaſonable Check, and cannot but bring them back a little to Conſideration, whither it is they are going. And if there were no other Advantage in it, this would be ſufficient, that it delivers them from the Temptations and Opportunities of Sin, and the fatal Poiſon of Examples. How many are there who would never be guilty of prophane Oaths and horrid Execrations, which deſtroy the Conſcience, how many others who would never arrive to a Habit in thoſe Helliſh Practices, if they had not the Vogue of Faſhion and Cuſtom in the Company they keep! And if the Laws were duly executed, that Faſhion would be broke, and the Practice diſcouraged, which would take away the only Temptation there can be to that Vice. Were Public-Houſes reſtrain'd to their original Uſe, by Inſpection into into their Diſorders, and the Execu tion of the Laws upon them, Tipli

would be prevented, and in that th great Occaſion of Drunkenneſs remo ved. Were Men kept by the lik Means from Idleneſs, and inured t honeſt Induſtry and Labour, the would not have Leiſure to be tem pted to Gaming, Extravagance an Debauchery. Were they obliged b the due Execution of the Laws to conſtant Attendance at Church, hov
many unhappy Opportunities of pro phaning the Lord's-Day, would b cut off! And were the Prophanatio of it by Sports and Paſtimes vigorou ly ſuppreſs'd, how many Vices tha evidently have their Riſe from tha would be prevented! When all ſor of religious Converſation is ſo gene rally exploded, and Virtue made Jeſt of, and the Scriptures either ri diculed or denied, does not this ap parently encourage and confirm thoſ
that are already vicious in their Con tempt of theſe things? and even with thoſe that are better diſpoſed among them, does it not inſenſibly corrup
their Principles, abate their Reverenc
t

Virtue, and work them by degrees
a ſettled Diſtaſt and Averſion to Way which they find every here ſpoken againſt? Are not even y good Men the worſe for Con-ſation as it now goes? Is there not powerful Infection in the Diſcourſes a lewd or prophane Wit, which ore or leſs leave an unhappy Tinure upon the Audience? But by legal Proſecution of ſuch Blaſphees and Impieties, this ſcandalous centiouſneſs would be over-awed, d a young Gentleman might come to Company, without the Danger turning Deiſt or Atheiſt; and a od Man might appear amongſt his eighbours without ſuch a terrible ock to his Religion and Morals.
hat can be more dangerous to Vir-
e, than the impudent Sollicitations lewd Women in our Streets, the eſts of Bawdry that are known and ttled in particular Houſes, and thoſe en Nurſeries of Irreligion and Lewdeſs, the Play-Houſes? How many oung and inconſiderate Creatures
re debauched and undone by theſe emptations, who might otherwiſe ave proved good and virtuous, and made

made an honourable Figure in th World! And muſt it not therefor be a very generous and great Deſign by putting the Laws in Execution, t deliver Men from theſe dangerou Circumſtances? to ſtarve their natu ral Propenſity to Vice, by the wan of Opportunities to excite and indulg it? In ſhort, Religion and goo Manners cannot poſſibly flouriſh til theſe dreadful Obſtacles be taken ou of the Way.

Again; This Execution of the Laws will ſtrengthen the good Inſtructions of the Pulpit. The Clergy are ſent by our great Maſter upon this very Errand, to reclaim Men (by Perſuaſion) from their Vices; and 'tis eaſie to perceive how much the Care of the Magiſtrate may do to forward their Succeſs: For nothing makes Men kearken more willingly to Reaſon, than an Apprehenſion that they ſhall ſpeedily ſuffer for it if they don't. This will alſo ſatisfie them, that Virtue is not only a Topic of Diſcourſe for their Miniſter, but that the State inſiſts upon it too, and declares againſt Vice, as an Enemy to the Public;

; which will tend to heighten their verence to the ſacred Office of the ergy, and poſſeſs them with a bet-Opinion of the Fooliſhneſs of Preach-
. It will bring them more frequent-to attend divine Service in the urch, (which in many Places, to Scandal of a Chriſtian Country, hardly ſo full as the Taverns and e-Houſes are at the ſame Time;)
d this not only by way of conſe-ence of what was ſaid before, but o as the Laws againſt Abſenting
m divine Service are to be put in ecution, as well as thoſe againſt earing and Debauchery.
It is alſo a particular Advantage to r Church, as it brings it nearer to Primitive Pattern. Thoſe Chrians had not (as we have) the Adntage of Laws and Civil Magiſtrates puniſh Vice by Authority of the ate; but they were ſo much the re ſevere in ſpiritual Cenſures upon of their own Body who were cont of any ſcandalous Immorality.
"They were infinitely careful to keep "the Honour of their Religion un"ſpotted, to ſtifle every Sin in its "Birth,

Cave's Primitive Chriſtian. Part III. Ch. 5.

" Birth, and by bringing Offende
" to public Shame and Penalty,
" keep them from propagating
" malignant Influence of a bad Exa
" ple.--They ſtrove by all wa

" Perſons within the Bounds of " der and Regularity,--and keep
" that Strictneſs and Purity of Ma
" ners that had rendred their Re " gion ſo renouned and triumpha
" in the World. This was the pio Zeal and Care of the firſt Chriſtia which it muſt certainly well becom us, who are their Succeſſors in t ſame excellent Faith, to imitate.

It will, laſtly, take off the Objec
on of the Diſſenters, that our Chur is a Shelter for the Lewd and Diſ lute. By this we clear our ſelves that heavy Imputation, (for t Truth is, we have too many ſu amongſt us, and tho' our Doctrine not to blame for it, our Diſcipline t evidently is,) if we apply our ſelves give all the Uneaſineſs we can wicked Men, by the ſevere and in parti

rtial Punishment of their Wicked-ſs; we do then, in the Name of Church of England, enter a public otest, diſclaim thoſe ſcandalous embers, and as much as we are able, ive them out of our Profeſſion.

I hope, Gentlemen, you will now
w me to affirm, That as we love r dear, our native Country; as we ſire the Peace and Happineſs of the UEEN, the private Safety of our ſelves
d our Fellow-Subjects, the Honour of ur Eſtabliſh'd Church, the Security
the Government, and the general
roſperity of this great united Iſland, e ought to put the Laws againſt mmorality and Prophaneneſs into a ourſe of vigorous Execution. We muſt Enemies both to God and Man, e muſt be Traytors both to Church
d State, if we do not. Let me then, ith all the paſſionate Earneſtneſs ith which 'tis poſſible for me to ſolcit the deareſt Intereſts a Man can ve: Let me beg you to join in this eceſſary Work, this great good Service to our Religion and Country;
nd that, as you will anſwer it before e God of Heaven, to whom you and

I muſt

I must give a ſtrict Account of ou
Publick Truſt as well as of our Priva
Actions. And, may that God be ple ſed to crown all our Endeavours
this kind with Succeſs, to the Glo
of his Name, the Encouragement
Religion and Virtue, and the everla
ing Advantage of thoſe poor Sou whoſe Benefit is intended in them.

I am,

Gentlemen,

Your very Humble Servant,

JOHN DISNEY

AN

AN ESSAY UPON THE Execution of the LAWS AGAINST Immorality & Prophaneneſs.

Th. MY dear Eugenius, I'm glad to ſee you. This is a Favour I have long expected with ſome Impatience. What is it has made you ſuch a Stranger here?

Eug. Not want of Friendſhip, I aſſure you; I ſhould be the greateſt Enemy to my ſelf if I did not value Theotimus. But Neceſſity has no Law; unavoidable Buſineſs confined me.

Th. I muſt allow your Excuſe, in hopes you will do me the ſame Juſtice when I have Occaſion to return it: In the mean time take your Place, dear Friend, and let us enjoy one another to the beſt Advantage, while we may. You found me cloſe at Study; but 'tis the beſt natured Diſturbance in the World: The Converſation of Eugenius being more to my Improvement always, than the dull Road of Books and Solitude.

Eug. You are pleas'd to be at the Expence of a Compliment to ſave me that of asking Pardon for interrupting you: But tho' I am not vain enough to think my Company an Improvement beyond your own Studies; yet I am ſenſible, that to break in ſometimes upon a Student, is but to give him Breath to purſue his Books afterwards with the greater Vigour and Succeſs.

Th. You come freſh from the World of News and Action; pray how go our Affairs abroad?

Eug. The moſt of our News in this dead Seaſon of the Year, is to be expected from what our Governours are doing at Home.

Th.

Th. It is ſo: And I muſt not forget one thing which extremely pleaſes me; I hear the Government has entruſted you with a Commiſſion for the Peace, of which I ſincerely give you Joy.

Eug. Your very humble Servant, Theotimus: but that Commiſſion, I'm afraid, will yet more abridge my Opportunities of viſiting and enjoying my Friends.

Th. It may be ſo; and yet the Service of the Public muſt ever take Place of private Accounts. Your Time, tho' you may be ſure we wiſh for as much of it as can be ſpared, will be laid out to very good Purpoſe, when 'tis for the Honour of God, the Service of your Prince, and Advantage of your Country.

Eug. It's a troubleſome Office, which I ſhould never have ſought for; but ſome Body, it ſeems, there was, who thought it convenient I ſhould be in.

Th. I hope you intend to act: Have you qualified your ſelf?

Eug. Yes, Sir, I have: and what's more, I could not ſatisfie my Conſcience upon eaſier Terms. For the Government, by putting us into Commiſſion, lodges in our Hands a TRUST, which, if we don't execute, we betray. The very giving us this Authority and Power to ſerve the Public is a ſufficient Notification that Her Majeſty expects we ſhould make uſe of it for that End.

Th. An excellent Thought, my dear Eugenius; with the Bleſſing of God go on and proſper. The Moraliſts of the Heathen World could tell us, That we are not born for our ſelves. To wallow in our Pleaſures, and fatten upon the Sweat and Merit of our Anceſtors, is ſomething, in my Opinion, very much below a Gentleman. Nay, 'tis not ſo much as a diſcreet Self-love: For without the Benefits of Magiſtracy we could have no Security of whatever we propoſe to enjoy; no Comfort in our Eſtates, no Reliſh in our Diverſions, no Safety in our Retirement, but muſt be always upon the Defenſive, againſt the Rapine and Malice of our Neighbours.

Eug. Some perhaps will tell you, There are buſie Magiſtrates enough that love to be employ'd, and we may leave the Care of Government to them.

Th.

Th. But if Security and Peace are owing to the Activity of thoſe that are entruſted to preſerve them, the Diſorders we ſtill ſee muſt be owing to ſuch as betray that Truſt in Sloth and Negligence, and Affectation of their own Eaſe. Why will theſe Gentlemen contribute to the Diſturbance of Mankind, by laying aſleep the Power that's given them to ſuppreſs it? There is need of all the Aſſiſtance that can be had to reduce the turbulent Vices and Paſſions of ill Men: and from the wretched Effects of them which we ſee in the daily Tumults and Diſorders that happen in the World, the Conſequence is plain, that thoſe who concern themſelves againſt them are not enough; but all that are in Commiſſion ought to appear, if either themſelves would enjoy quiet, or have others do ſo.

Eug. I am ſenſible of what you ſay; that all the Buſineſs of a Magiſtrate in the Execution of his Office certainly ariſes from the Pride, the Luſt, the Paſſion or Revenge, the extravagant, contentious, or ungovernable Temper of thoſe that are under him; but the Caſe has been the ſame, ever ſince the Fall of Adam, and will be ſo till the general Diſſolution.

Th. True: And therefore there will be always Need of Laws and Magiſtrates to diſcountenance and puniſh ſuch Vices as, if let alone, would quickly make this World a moſt uneaſie Dwelling. Whoever aims at the Peace and Happineſs of the Public, ought to make Uſe of all his Authority to puniſh Vice. Not to draw the Sword of Juſtice againſt it, is to contribute to our Country's Ruine.

Eug. But many of the Vices I ſpoke of, do not in themſelves ſo properly fall under the Cognizance of humane Laws, as in the Effects of them, when they break out into Sedition, Robberies, Rapes, Murders, and the like.

Th. It may be ſo; becauſe they are Paſſions or Affections of the Mind, and till they break out into overt-Acts, do not become ſo miſchievous to the Public. But ſome Vices there are, againſt the ſimple Acts of which, tho' at firſt View they ſeem to terminate only in a private Damage to the Offender himſelf, the Laws have made particular Proviſion, becauſe of the Conſequences that may follow upon them them to the Public. Prophane Swearing, for Inſtance, which notoriouſly contributes to the Growth of Perjury: For Oaths are little minded, when common Uſe has ſullied them, and every Minute's Repetition has made them cheap and vulgar; that Reverence which is a natural Guard to their Authority is loſt, and Conſcience hardens againſt all Reſtraint and Obligation from them. Now if the Solemnity of an Oath, the Calling God to witneſs to the Truth of what we affirm, or promiſe, or deny, be not ſupported in the Reſpect due to it, there is an End of all Security and Faith amongſt Men; the Fear of God and of his Vengeance againſt Falſhood, being the higheſt Obligation upon us that can be to ſpeak Truth: And this Solemnity the common Swearer plays with every Day, and renders familiar, and as much as in him lies, contemptible and inſignificant. So Lewdneſs, Drunkenneſs, &c. becauſe they emaſculate the Spirits of Men, impair their Strength, and ruine their Eſtates, and thereby render them unfit to ſerve the Public, which in ſome way or other requires their Aſſiſtance to the common Support.

Eug. In Caſes of Swearing, Drunkenneſs, and other Vices of that kind, which do not immediately affect the publick Peace, but only by long winded Conſequences, it may be as well not to be ſo very exact and rigorous,

Object. I. Let every Man look to himſelf, as he only ſhall anſwer for himſelf, at the Day of Judgment. A Magiſtrate will be thought very impertinent, that ſhould take much Notice of theſe things.

Th. I'm ſorry to hear this from Eugenius, whoſe perſonal Character for Sobriety, Religion, and good Senſe, gave me almoſt an Aſſurance that he would make Uſe of his Authority and Power, for the Suppreſſing all Immorality and Prophaneneſs.

Eug. You muſt not take me up too faſt, Theotimus. Reſolutions may be obſtinate, but never can be judicious, till they have run thro' a Courſe of Argument; and if they ſtand the Teſt of Reaſon, they are not only more eaſily juſtified to others, but more ſatisfactory to our ſelves, and take deeper Root in our Conſciences. This Objection I have heard; and I propoſe

for an Anſwer, being always willing to ſubmit to Reaſon and Religion.

Th. I ask your Pardon for being too forward in my Cenſure. As for answering Objections, I ſhall very readily undertake it: becauſe I am well aſſured, there can be no Objection againſt puniſhing Immorality and Vice, but what will be eaſily removed; and this that you have ſtarted for the Firſt of them is a good Omen of the Weakneſs of all the reſt. I ask thoſe wiſe Men that care for no Body but themſelves, if ſuch a Temper can be ſuitable to the true Spirit of Chriſtianity? Our Religion inculcates nothing more than a charitable Concern for others as well as for our ſelves, eſpecially in what relates to their eternal Happineſs. What was the whole Life of the Bleſſed Jeſus, but one continued Inſtance of Zeal and Induſtry for the Salvation of Mankind? Did He not go about doing Good, Inſtructing, Reproving and Exhorting, that He might bring us to a Life of Piety and Virtue here, and to eternal Life and Happineſs hereafter? Do's not St. Paul command us to imitate the Example of Chriſt in a due Concern for the Sal-

Salvation of our Chriſtian Brother? Look not every Man on his own things

And this is what our Lord commended in the Rev. 2. 2. Church of Epheſus, I know thy Works, and that THOU CANST NOT BEAR them that are evil. It is con-

confeſſedly an Argument of a baſe Spi-
, when a Man contracts himſelf with-his own perſonal Intereſt, and takes Notice who's unhappy, if himſelf otherwiſe. This, in Matters of mporal and ordinary Concern, ould not fail of being condemned by e Objectors themſelves: But in Mat-rs of Religion and Virtue, Mens otions are generally ſo flat, and e Impreſſions of Eternity ſo faint, at they take it for Civility, to let a an go to Hell without ſtopping him, d propoſe a great deal of Wiſdom in ring for none of theſe things.

Eug. They think they have enough do to take Care of their own Mo-ls and Salvation; and therefore they ave their Neighbours to take Care at ome, as they do.

Th. In truth your Objectors may ably their own bad Condition may equire it. For no Man that is, or ever as, in ſincere good Earneſt concern-d for his own Salvation, can poſſibly

cauſe Charity is grounded upon a true Senſe of the Misfortune and Unhappineſs of the Caſe; and where his own

Experience has convinced him of that he cannot but pity others that lie under the ſame Neceſſity.

Eug. But are we to anſwer at the Day of Judgment for the Sins of others?

Th. No Man ſhall ſuffer at that Day for any Sins, in the Guilt of which he never was at all concern'd, either as Eug. But, to the Merits of the Objection, Theotimus; pray answer me.

Th. I think any Clergyman, who has the Souls of Men committed to his Care, and makes Conscience of his Charge, must needs be sensible as well of the Difficulty as the Importance of the Work; and if he have a sincere Zeal for God and Religion, and the eternal Happiness of Men, cannot but be well pleased to find the Concurrence of the Magistrate assist and justify his Labours, and render what he does the more effectual. Their several Offices are as distinct as can be. It's true, their End is the same, the Honour of God, and the reclaiming of Ill Men; but the Means are widely different. The one is to reprove, the other to punish Vice; the one is to urge the Law of God, the other to execute those of Man; the one is to insist upon the Fear of future Punishments, the other to curb me individual Offence be not twice unished. The Stat. 4 Jac. 1. cap. against Drunkenneſs, makes ex- reſs Proviſion, that the Eccleſiaſtical uriſdiction ſhall not thereby be a- idg'd or reſtrain'd, but may ſtill roceed againſt Offenders by Canon- aw, as uſual. The like Proviſion made by 1 Eliz. cap. 2 and 3 ac. 1. cap. 4 againſt Abſenters from hurch; and by 1 Car. 1. cap. 1. and Car. 1. cap. 1. againſt Prophana- on of the Lord's-Day. Yet it muſt owned, that (whereſoever the ault lies) notwithſtanding this ower they have, they ſeldom exert Whether they have no Preſent- ents brought them, or whether ey take no Notice of them when ey are brought, I can't tell; but it is in Fact, that the Diſcipline the Church, and the Terror of enance and Excommunication are hro' ſome Body's Fault or other) a very low Ebb, ſeldom exerci- d, and little fear'd. If Church- ardens would regard their Oaths, eir Articles, and their Duty; they ould however make conſtant Pre- ntments of this kind to the Spiri- tual Judges, as the Conſtable and others ought to do to the civil Magiſtrate; that diſſolute Men may take Notice, that all good Government and Laws (both in Church and State) are againſt them. But however, as the Temporal Powers have declared againſt intending by their Statutes to encroach upon or reſtrain the Eccleſiaſtical; it is ill Manners not to return the Civility, and that the Eccleſiaſtical Courts ſhould pretend to ſuperſede the Temporal, which they have certainly no Right to do.

And to convince you, that 'tis not only in Great Britain and the preſent Age, that the Magiſtracy is become ſo interfering (as you think) with the ſpiritual Courts in the Suppreſſion of Vice, be pleaſed to conſider; that, tho' during the firſt Three Hundred Years of Chriſtianity, when our Religion was every where perſecuted by the Laws of the Empire, and entirely deſtitute of the Countenance and Protection of Magiſtrates, Church-Cenſures were the only Method that could be uſed for the Puniſhment of ſuch Scan-

Scandals: Yet ſo ſoon as ever the State became Chriſtian, (the Diſcipline of the Church retaining ſtill its full Vigour,) the Emperours made uſe of their civil Authority to ſuppreſs them, enacted Laws, and iſſued out their Edicts for that Purpoſe, of the ſame Nature with our Penal Statutes and Royal Proclamations, againſt Immorality and Prophaneneſs. This is viſible throughout all the ancient Codices of the Civil Law: And other Princes ſince have done the ſame in their own Dominions, as appears by the Conſtitutions of the German Emperours in every Age from that to this, and the Statutes of almoſt every Nation in Europe, as well as ours. And ſo far was the Church from thinking their Authority injured by the State intermedling in this Affair, that ſeveral of thoſe Laws and Edicts (as appears upon Record) were the Effect of the Solicitations of the Biſhops and Clergy in their Synods; and that too, while themſelves were uſing their ſynodical Power at the very ſame time forming Canons and Anathema's againſt Vice, to be executed by the ſpiritual Courts.

Object. IV. Eug. If Temporal Laws then are to take Place in theſe Matters, were it not better to proſecute by Indictment at the Quarter-Seſſion, or Aſſize; which will make the Offender a more publick Example, than for the Juſtice of Peace to concern himſelf againſt him at Home?

Th. A common Drunkard, diſſolute and prophane Fellow, may (to be ſure) be proſecuted, as you ſay, by Indictment; and 'tis to be hoped it would make him more aſhamed of his Wickedneſs, to be branded in that Manner. But no Man is to be branded till he becomes notorious by repeated Offences of theſe Kinds. The firſt and mildeſt Method to reform him (which Reformation is certainly the Intent of the Law) would be, to levy the Penalty by the Statute, which is much leſs Charge to the Offender and more private. If this will not reclaim him, it is time enough to take the other Method afterward. Beſides, the Queſtion is not, what we (for particular Reaſons) may be

leaſed to think convenient in theſe aſes; but what the Laws we are mpowered and ſworn to execute rect us to? We may by common aw indict; but the Statutes, with hich we are particularly concern-, direct us to levy ſo much Money, Warrant to the Conſtable or o-er Officers, for each Offence; and erefore this is the more regular ay. I will add farther, that if oſecutions againſt Swearing, &c. confined to the Method of In-ctment, you will have too few Of-nders puniſhed; perhaps Three or our at a Seſſion; but if you form onvictions nearer Home, you may ng a very conſiderable Number Puniſhment: And this may poſ-ly in a little time bear down the pudence of Vice, when the other ay leaves Hope for Nineteen out Twenty to eſcape unpuniſh'd; which Remiſneſs, the Vigour d Spirit of the Law evaporates. ſides, who ſhall proſecute? The arge of drawing an Indictment, o' it is not much, is what (in this d Age of Zeal) few People care be at. If only one or two be indicted at a time, the Charge indeed is trifling, and ſo I doubt will be the Conſequence: If Ten, Twenty, or Thirty be proſecuted at the ſame Seſſion, the Influence upon Offenders would indeed be more hopeful, but the Expence would begin to be conſiderable. However theſe things be, I'm ſure every Magiſtrate is bound, on ſeveral Accounts, to take ſome Method or other that the Laws againſt Immorality and Prophaneneſs be put in full Execution.

Eug. By the Way, I deſire you to let me, once for all, into the Arguments by which you prove this Obligation upon every Magiſtrate. The other Objections I have heard, ſhall be reſerved till by and by, if you will then favour me with Leave to propoſe them.

Argument I. Th. I argue Firſt, from the general Tenor of their Commiſſion from Almighty God, the Fountain of all Authority and Power, in the ſacred Scriptures. St. Paul, in his Epiſtle to the Romans, denouncing Damnation to thoſe that reſiſt the Magiſtracy, gives this Reaſon for it, that

Rom. 13: 3,4. Rulers are not a TERROR to GOOD Works,

Works, but to EVIL. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the Power? Do that which is good, and thou ſhalt have Praiſe of the ſame; for he is the Miniſter of God to thee for Good. But if thou do that which is EVIL, be afraid; for he beareth not the Sword in vain; for he is the Miniſter of God, a Revenger to execute Wrath upon him that doth EVIL. By this it appears, that the Inſtitution of Magiſtrates was for the Encouraging whatſoever is good, and for the Suppreſſing and Puniſhing whatſoever is evil. Now to give this Argument its due Force, I need only ask, whether prophane Swearing, Lewdneſs, exceſſive or unſeaſonable Drinking, and Prophanation of the Lord's-Day, be EVIL or not? If they be, it ſeems the Magiſtrate is bound (the ſupreme Magiſtrate by making good Laws, and the ſubordinate by putting thoſe Laws in Execution) to puniſh and reſtrain them. It is plainly ſaid, He is not to bear the Sword in vain, to enjoy his Power without executing it; but is the Miniſter of God, appointed for this Purpoſe, to be a Revenger to execute Wrath, the Laws of his Country committed to him, upon him that doth Evil: And that not only Princes and ſupreme Governours are concerned in this, but inferior Magiſtrates partake of the ſame Commiſſion, as deputed by them, you need only turn to the parallel Place in 1 Pet. 2. 13, 14, the firſt Epiſtle of St. Peter; Submit your ſelves to every Ordinance of Man, for the Lord's Sake; whether it be to the King, as Supreme; or unto Governours, as unto them that are ſent by him, for the Puniſhment of evil Doers, and for the Praiſe of them that do well.

Again. I believe it will hardly be denied, that there lies a general Obligation upon all Chriſtians to promote the Glory of Chriſt, as much as is poſſible, according to the ſeveral Opportunities and Advantages they have for doing it. And he is then, I think, moſt properly ſaid to be glorified by us, when we ſet our ſelves to the utmoſt of our Power to further and bring about (both in our ſelves and others) the great End which he propoſed in dying to redeem us. Now that was *
* Acts 3. 26. Tit. 2. 14. Rom. 6. 6. 1 John 3. 8. to turn every one of us from our Iniquities, to make us happy in the Ob-

Obſervation of his pure and holy Laws, and the Imitation of his excellent Example. I ask then, whether a Magiſtrate has not a particular Power to promote it, by puniſhing thoſe wicked Cuſtoms and Vices that are directly contrary thereto? And if ſo, whether there is not a particular Obligation to uſe his Authority in this Caſe? Ye that love the Lord, hate Evil; ſays the Pſalmiſt: And certainly that Man's Religion ſits very looſe upon him, who (tho' he pretends to be ſober and virtuous himſelf) can ſuffer all about him to be as wicked as they will, when he is armed with Authority to prevent or puniſh them. Pſal. 97. 10.

Eug. You have gone thro' this Point, Theotimus, with Succeſs enough; 'tis time for your Second Argument.

Th. It is ſo: And that I draw from the Duty he owes his Country in this Matter, which he expoſes to the JUDGMENTS of God by not doing his Part to ſuppreſs the Impieties that draw them down. Sin then grows National when it prevails without Control, when the Eccleſiaſtical Argument II.

cleſiaſtical and Civil Powers that ſhould reſtrain it take no Notice, ſuffer it to appear in the Streets, in the Face of the Sun, with the utmoſt Impudence and Freedom; and the Laws themſelves, which call for Juſtice againſt it, are tied down and gagg'd by the Treachery of thoſe that ſhould act by them. When things are thus, 'tis a dangerous Symptom of the approaching Ruine of that People: God, who puniſhes States and Kingdoms as ſuch only in this Life, will, for the Honour of his Providence, not be very long ere he revenge himſelf of ſuch a Nation.

I need not put you in Mind of the old World, and the Cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, entirely ruined in a dreadful and remarkable Manner for their Sins, and particularly for their Luſts. The whole Story of God's Dealing with the Jews, 1 Cor. 10. 11. which was written for our Admonition, upon whom the Ends of the World are come, is Demonſtration enough, that * Hoſ. 4. 2, 3. Jer. 5. 7, 8, 9, 25. * Lewdneſs, Drunkenneſs, Prophaneneſs, &c. as well as Idolatry, provoke the Iſa. 5. 11, 13, 22, 25. Wrath of God, and are in their Pſal. 107. 33, 34. Conſequences fatal to the Public, where where they are ſuffer'd without Correction; and that as to the Jews themſelves, the Incurſions of their Enemies, the Slaughter of their Forces, the Deſolation of their City and Temple, their ſeveral Captivities, and at laſt the utter Deſtruction of their Church and State by the Romans, were the Judgments of God upon them, not only for their Idolatry or Unbelief, but alſo for their other Wickedneſs. Joſephus, their own Hiſtorian, acknowleding, "That as he thought no Nation under Heaven ever ſuffered ſuch "things as they did from the Ro-"mans; So none from the Begin-"ning of the World abounded "more in all kinds of Impiety and "Vice. And that theſe things might have been prevented by the Care of good Magiſtrates, in timely puniſhing ſuch Vices, appears from the Declaration of God Himſelf, Run ye too and fro thro' the Streets of Jeruſalem, and ſee now, and know, and ſeek in the broad Places thereof, if ye can find a Man, if there be any that executeth Judgment, and I will pardon it: And from the Example of the Zeal of Phi-

Joſeph. Lib. 6. c. 11.

Jer. 5. 1.

*Numb.*25.11. Phinehas, againſt the Luſt of Zimri and Cosbi, which brought down a Bleſſing upon himſelf, and ſtopp'd the Wrath of God againſt the People. Our preſent QUEEN has piouſly declared Her Senſe of this in Her Proclamation,* againſt Prophaneneſs and Immorality, which She acknowledges are highly diſpleaſing to God, a great Reproach to the Religion and Government of England, and if not timely remedied, may juſtly draw down the Divine Vengeance upon Her and Her Kingdoms. So that as they expect the Bleſſing of God to make Her Reign happy and proſperous, Her Magiſtrates are required to put in Execution the Laws againſt Impiety and Vice; for She diſclaims all Hope of the Divine Aſſiſtance to preſerve the State and the Proteſtant Religion in due Safety, without a Religious Obſervation of God's Laws, and Execution of Her own. In ſhort, we have all the Ground that can be both from Scripture and Reaſon to conclude, that Wickedneſs, where it is not publickly diſcouraged, betrays a Nation to the Judgments and the Curſe of Heaven, and is the he readieſt Way our Enemies themſelves could propoſe to ruine us.

It is worth our while to remember too, how far our ſelves are perſonally concerned in this Argument: For ſuch a Negligence may alſo draw down particular Judgments upon Us. This Eli found, whoſe Neglect in not puniſhing the * Lewdneſs and † Prophaneneſs of his Sons (which as a Magiſtrate he ought to have done, whatever might be ſaid to excuſe him as a Father) God reſented very highly. For I have told him (ſays he) that I will judge his Houſe for ever, for the Iniquity which he knoweth; becauſe his Sons made themſelves vile, and he RESTRAINED them not. And therefore I have ſworn unto the Houſe of Eli, that the Iniquity of Eli's Houſe ſhall not be purged with Sacrifice nor Offering for ever. Poverty and a ſhort Life (the Particulars of the Curſe) were for this Sin entailed upon all his Poſterity; becauſe he * knew of the Iniquity of his Sons, and did not reſtrain or PUNISH them; for it's plain he † did REPROVE them. And let all Magiſtrates beware of Eli's Fate, that are are guilty of Eli's Negligence; who (as the Scripture repreſents the Idols of the Heathen) have Eyes, and ſee not; Ears, and hear not; are every Day in Company with Vice, yet pretend to know nothing of the matter; receive Complaints and Informations from every Side, and yet take as little Care to reſtrain it, as if it was perfectly foreign to their Buſineſs.

Argument III. Another Argument, in this Matter, is drawn from the Obligation a Magiſtrate's Oath lays upon him to execute theſe as well as other Statutes. When a Juſtice of Peace is ſworn into the Commiſſion, he makes Oath —— "That as Juſtice of "the Peace in the County of —— "in all Articles in the QUEEN's "Commiſſion to him directed, he "ſhall do equal Right to the Poor "and to the Rich, after his Cun- "ning, Wit, and Power, and after "the Laws and Cuſtoms of the "Realm, and Statutes thereof "made; and that he ſhall not let "for Gift or other Cauſe, but well "and truly do his Office in that "behalf. This Oath refers him to his Commiſſion, and all Articles therein herein to him directed; what thoſe re, you will find in the firſt Aſſig-avimus of the Commiſſion. "We have aſſigned you and every one of you jointly and ſeverally our Juſtices, &c. to keep and cauſe to be kept all Ordinances and Statutes made for the Good of the Peace, and for Conſervation of the ſame, and for the Quiet, Rule and Government of our People in all and every the Articles thereof, in our ſaid County, according to the Force, Form, and Effect of the ſame; and to chaſtiſe and puniſh all Perſons offending againſt the Form of thoſe Ordinances, or Statutes, or any of them, in the County aforeſaid, as according to the Form of thoſe Ordinances and Statutes ſhall be fit to be done. So that e is ſolemnly ſworn to the Exe-ution of all ſuch Statutes as the Legiſlative Power of the Nation as thought fit to throw upon his Care; as are all thoſe made againſt Drunkenneſs, Tipling, prophane Swear-ng, Blaſphemy, lewd and diſorderly Pra-ctices, and Prophanation of the Lord's-Day, as much as any other Statutes whatſoever. 'Tis hard to imagine how Dalt. c. 5.

how a Juſtice of Peace can think himſelf more concern'd by his Office to puniſh Vagabonds, ſuppreſs Riots, determine Settlements of the Poor, or private Quarrels of the Neighbourhood, than he is to levy Twelve Pence on a Prophane Swearer, Five Shillings on a Drunkard, Ten Shillings on the Public-Houſe that ſuffers Tippling, or any other Penalty which the Law exacts from the Vices and Immoralities of Mankind. The ſame Oath, the ſame Commiſſion, the ſame Statute-Law binds him both to the one and the other, laying an equal Obligation upon his Conſcience. How a Magiſtrate, who wilfully neglects to puniſh Exceſs, Prophaneneſs and Impiety, (be he never ſo induſtrious and exact in other Parts of his Office) can excuſe himſelf from the Guilt of Perjury, I don't pretend to know; but if he reaſons fairly, he will find himſelf as much forſworn, as an Evidence, who upon his Oath to declare the whole Truth, conceals the moſt conſiderable Part of it; and his Perjury ſo much the more infamous, as the ill Example and Effects of it will be miſchievous.

Eug.

Eug. Well, Theotimus, This is a hard Chapter, I don't know what to think on't. Go on to ſomewhat elſe.

Th. But let me engage you then to conſider this Argument ſeriouſly the next time you are alone. I lay more Streſs upon it, than to be willing it ſhould be juſtled aſide.

Eug. Your Argument's ſo ſtrong to one that has any Remains of Conſcience and the Fear of God left in him, that it will be thought of; for the Obligation of an Oath is certainly a very ſacred thing.

Th. 'Tis pity all the World does not think it ſo; or at leaſt, that Men ſo often forget in Practice what they allow in Theory. But to put them in Mind of this Obligation, and leave them inexcuſable, her Majeſty has taken Care by repeated Proclamations to enforce it.

Eug. Thoſe Proclamations indeed are very ſtrict, and frequently read to us. 'Twere well if they were better attended to than they are.

Th. We have there the Commands of an excellent Princeſs, to revive and reinforce the Execution of thoſe Arg. IV.

good Laws; which is a new Obligation upon every one of us to do our Duty, and may very well come in for another Argument in the Caſe.

As the whole Courſe of Her Majeſty's Reign has ſhewn Her a prudent and affectionate Mother to Her People, ſo in this She has more eſpecially expreſſed Her Zeal for their eternal, as well as temporal Happi-

Particulars than the former; by which She requires the utmoſt Care of Her Magiſtrates to ſuppreſs and puniſh Vice.

I have the Second Proclamation here by me, and if you pleaſe we will remark ſome Paſſages in it. It is worth the taking Notice of, that Her Majeſty complains, in the Beginning of it, that ſo little Regard was had to the other which She ſent out before, the Laws therein mention'd having not been executed according to

Her

Her juſt Expectation and Command. And toward the latter End of it, She directs and commands all Judges of Aſſize and Juſtices of the Peace to give ſtrict Charges at their reſpective Aſſizes and Seſſions, not only for the Proſecution of Offenders, but alſo of all Perſons that, contrary to their Duty, ſhall be remiſs or negligent in putting the Laws againſt Vice and Prophaneneſs in Execution. From whence I infer, that Her Majeſty hears of and reſents the Negligence of Her Juſtices in this Matter; and that our Diſtance from the Court will not be able wholly to skreen us from the Inſpection of a wiſe and careful Sovereign. But to proceed, —— We moſt ſeriouſly and religiouſly conſidering (ſays her Majeſty) that it is an indiſpenſable Duty on Us, to be careful above all other things, to preſerve and advance the Honour and Service of Almighty God, and to diſcourage and ſuppreſs all Vice, Prophaneneſs, Debauchery and Immorality, which are ſo highly diſpleaſing to God, &c. do hereby STRICTLY charge and command all Our Judges, Mayors, Sheriffs, Juſtices of the Peace, &c. to be VERY VIGILANT and

STRICT in the DISCOVERY and EFFECTUAL PROSECUTION and PUNISHMENT of all Perſons who ſhall be guilty of exceſſive Drinking, Blaſphemy, prophane Swearing and Curſing, Lewdneſs, Prophanation of the Lord's-Day, &c. to ſuppreſs Bawdy-Houſes, and Gaming-Houſes; — to put in Execution the Statute 29 Car. 2. c. 7. for the Obſervation of Sundays, the 9 Will. 3. againſt Blaſphemy and Prophaneneſs, and ALL OTHER LAWS now in Force, for puniſhing and ſuppreſſing the Vices aforeſaid, as they will anſwer it to Almighty God, and upon Pain of Our higheſt Diſpleaſure.

Words cannot be framed more poſitive, or more emphatical, to give us the Senſe of the Royal Authority in this Matter. If Princes are to be obeyed, and every Ordinance of theirs to be ſubmitted to, how can a Magiſtrate, thus ſtrictly charged from the Throne, upon his Allegiance to God and his Sovereign, pretend to anſwer it to either, if he be negligent in what Her Majeſty has ſo earneſtly required of him? She (be Her Zeal never ſo great for the Reformation of her People) cannot be every

every where in Perſon to ſee it effected; therefore She empowers Her ſubordinate Magiſtrates to act with Her Authority, and in Her Name, for that Purpoſe, throughout Her Dominion; She repoſes ſuch a Truſt in them, and there can be no Medium, but either they muſt faithfully diſcharge or wickedly betray that Truſt.

Eug. But ſome will anſwer you, That Proclamations of this kind are only for Form Sake; ſome certain Reaſons of State there are, why the Government ſhould ſeem to diſcountenance Vice, and yet perhaps would not be very much pleas'd to be too vigorouſly obeyed.

Th. In the firſt Place however, I obſerve, that Vice is what the Wiſdom of all Governments thinks it laudable to diſcountenance. Reaſons of State are nothing but Maxims of Policy; and if there are ſuch Reaſons for appearing to frown upon Immorality and Prophaneneſs, it is evidence enough to the Reputation of Virtue and Religion, as the wiſeſt Methods to ſupport the Government. But beſides this, the Objection charges a virtuous Prince with direct Hypocriſie. Her Proclamation (founded upon Laws that are in Force to the ſame Purpoſe) is the declared Rule by which She commands Her Juſtices of Peace and others in Authority to act; now if She have a ſecret Reſervation contrary to what She has declared to be Her Will, how ſhall we know it? How ſhall we govern our ſelves in acting? For my part, I think we have nothing to do, but in Obediente to act by Her expreſs Command in the Proclamation, and in Charity and Reſpect to believe She would have us do ſo.

Eug. Well, Friend, have you any more Arguments? If you have, pray diſpatch them.

Arg. V. Th. Yes, I have two more. One is from the Advantage it will be to the Poor, to whom the Forfeitures upon theſe Statutes are by Law appropriated. This, tho' it be not the chief Intention of the Law, is an accidental Conſequence of it? And were theſe Penalties duly exacted, they would amount (I fear) to a very conſiderable Sum, the Generality of People being ſo vicious as they are; and this would go a great way toward ward the Maintenance of thoſe poor Creatures whom we now complain of as a Burden. Not a Beggar would be ſeen in our Streets; ſmall Collections (if any) need to be made in our Pariſhes; thoſe that are Naked might be cloathed, thoſe that are Idle might be employed in publick Work-Houſes; and in ſhort, we ſhould ſcarce have a very poor Subject in the Nation. For 'tis generally Vice and Extravagance that make Men poor, eſpecially Drinking and Gaming, Idleneſs and Lewdneſs: Now if theſe were removed, by the due Execution of the Laws, the great Occaſions of Poverty would be taken away, and Men would be left to thrive (as God deſigned they ſhould) by Sobriety and Induſtry. Or if they cannot be wholly or ſuddenly ſuppreſſed, yet the pecuniary Penalties levied on Offenders would in the mean time contribute largely to the Support of ſuch as are already poor. It's true, perhaps, this might not laſt long; the vigorous Execution of Laws would ſtartle ſuch as have Reaſon to fear it, and keep them upon their Guard, ſo that the Number of Offences would quickly leſſen, and conſequently the Money to be raiſed would leſſen too; but in the mean time the Poor would be well provided for, and at the Charge of Vice, where the Burden ought to lie; and if Vice fall into Decay by rigorous Uſage, the other Conſequence will take Place, of keeping many from thoſe extravagant Meaſures that would impoveriſh them; and thereby, in Courſe of time, the Number of Poor would be leſſened, as well as the Fund that ſhould maintain them.

Art. VI. My laſt Argument I draw from the Charity we owe our vicious Neighbour, in endeavouring to reclaim him. I don't know any thing which the World more generally ſubſcribes to, than the Excellence of Charity. Now every one that conſiders the Nature of Benefits, muſt own that the Value of them riſes, not only in Proportion to the Degree of our Neighbour's Neceſſity, as he is more or leſs in want, but alſo to the Quality of what he ſtands in need of, as he wants this or that, ſome things being of more Importance to him than others. And therefore ſo much as his Eternal Happineſs in the World to come is of greater Concern than a ſhort and tranſitory Subſiſtance in this Life, the Charity of reclaiming him from Vice, and reducing him to thoſe ſober and religious Courſes that will bring him in due time to Heaven, muſt be proportionably much greater than only to cloath his Nakedneſs, relieve his Hunger, or any other Inſtance that terminates only in this preſent mortal State. The Affection which the bleſſed God of Mercy bears to all his rational Creatures, and eſpecially to Chriſtians, has made this the particular Buſineſs of his Miniſters, to perſwade Men from the Pulpit, to be wiſe in Matters of their trueſt and eternal Intereſt. The Care and Piety of our Governours has alſo enacted many good Laws, with this very End and Deſign, to ſtop Men in the Career of Wickedneſs, reform their vicious Manners, and oblige them, if poſſible, to reflect more ſeriouſly on another World, before they be called away by Death to enter upon it. Certainly then the Exe-

Execution of theſe Laws, with which every ſubordinate Magiſtrate is entruſted to that Purpoſe, is a Charity they owe to thoſe who are running blind and headlong to their own everlaſting Miſery.

Eug. Give me leave now to go on with my Objections; your laſt Argument naturally introduces ſome of them. One is, that in this Work of Reformation, the Magiſtrate is confined and limited; he can act no further than the Laws of the State empower him, which muſt be deficient in many Inſtances and in many Circumſtances, as all humane Laws are; and therefore are not extenſive enough to reach all thoſe Vices that will make us miſerable hereafter, nor in many Caſes entirely to ſuppreſs the Vices they will reach.

Object. V.

Th. I am ready to grant you this, that a Juſtice of Peace is limited by the Laws he is ſworn to act by; and can go no further in his Zeal for ſuppreſſing Vice, than they will allow him; nor is it fit he ſhould. But let him go ſo far, 'tis all that God and Man require of him, and I hope I have ſufficiently proved that ſo much they do require. Nor is the Charity leſs eſs: For if I be ſtraitned in my wn Circumſtances, and have but ittle to give to a poor Wretch that sks me, and I relieve him proporonably to what I have; is not this truly Charity in me, as if out of a ore plentiful Fortune I have given ore? Can a Magiſtrate pretend juſtifie himſelf at the Bar of God, hen he comes to be tried for Eterty upon the due Execution of his ffice, that becauſe he could not do much by Law as he himſelf was eaſed to think neceſſary for the Supreſſing Vice, he choſe rather to ſit ill, and let it take its Courſe without Diſturbance? Will not the reat and terrible God, who expects n Improvement of the Talents he has ommitted to us, (and that of Authoity, to be ſure, as well as the reſt,) eproach him as a ſlothful and wickd Servant, who pretending Fear eſt he ſhould not anſwer his Maer's Expectation, has buried the dvantages he had for doing Good, n Idleneſs and doing nothing.

Eug. But the Suppreſſion of ill Object. VI.

ly to be hoped for; and if we fail i

Eug. Well; ſuppoſe it not to be wholly impracticable, 'tis not like to be much better. If a Juſtice of Peace, who will regard theſe Matters, drive out Lewdneſs and Drunkenneſs, neſs, and other ill Practices, from one Pariſh or Liberty, ill People who have a Mind to Vice will enjoy themſelves in the next.

Object. VII.

Th. A Juſtice of Peace's Authority extends thro' all the County, or general Diviſion of the County, for which he is in Commiſſion. He is not tied up to Pariſhes, and little Diſtricts; but upon Information duly given him, may puniſh Vice in every Part of ſuch County or Diviſion. If he happen indeed to live upon the Borders of his Juriſdiction, a neighbouring Liberty may harbour (perhaps) the ſcandalous Refugees of Vice, and he cannot tell how to puniſh them; but thoſe Magiſtrates that have Authority there, and take no Notice of them, have the dreadful Guilt to anſwer for, of abetting them in their Sins. However, the Objection extends only to prove, that your neighbouring Juſtices ought alſo to do their Duty, but it will not countenance you in the Neglect of yours.

Object. VIII. Eug. After all that can be done in Execution of the Laws, we can hope hope to produce no more than an outward Reformation only by ſuch Means.

Th. Why not? You don't know how far the bleſſed Spirit of God may work upon the Offender's Mind, when he reflects upon the Penalty and Diſgrace he ſuffers from the Law for his Offence. We are told, that many Perſons have actually been brought to ſerious Conſideration by theſe Means, and that by the Grace of God may ripen in time to a thorough Converſion. The firſt Thought that naturally ariſes in the Offender is, What Harm is there in the thing I'm puniſh'd for? Perhaps at preſent he thinks, there is not much. But it will ſtill run in his Mind: when his Reaſon is cool, and he debates it over again, perhaps he will reflect, that from his Bible and the Pulpit, as well as from the Bench, he has heard his Practice more than once condemned, all good Men diſclaim it, both in their Diſcourſe and in their Lives, and he finds, by dear Experience, that the Repreſentatives of the Nation in Parliament have branded it as an Offence worth taking Notice of by Laws; and all theſe Conſiderations laid together may poſſibly weigh him down to ſomething more than an exterior Gravity and decent Behaviour. And ſuppoſe they do not go ſo far immediately, yet it is of very great Advantage to Offenders, and to the Public, to render the Practice of Vice and Prophaneneſs uneaſie, and ſcandalous to thoſe that love it. When Men are afraid of being overheard in every Oath they ſwear, of being diſcovered in every Act of Lewdneſs, of being ſeen and informed againſt for every drunken Debauch, and of having the Penalties of the Law exacted from them again, and that they will thereby be rendred infamous on theſe Accounts, they can enjoy themſelves no where with that Security, Reputation, and Pleaſure they propoſe in Wickedneſs, and this takes off all the Guſt of Sin. For this Reaſon they will ſoon be aſhamed and weary of the Practice, and leave it off; and when they have done that, they are in a great Meaſure armed againſt the moſt dangerous Prejudice in Favour vour of Vice, that it gave them daily Pleaſure without any Diſgrace attending it. Again, let an ill Habit be broke, and they have time to think of what is ſaid againſt it, and (generally ſpeaking) 'tis natural for Men to gather Arguments, and vent them too, againſt a Practice which themſelves have forſaken, if it be but to juſtifie themſelves for having forſaken it. Want of Conſideration is undoubtedly that which doſes the Sinner to his fatal Sleep of Vice and Prophaneneſs: Now when the Law has cupp'd and ſcarified him, and awakened him by Severities, Conſideration enters, and by the Bleſſing of God, Recovery may follow. And ſuppoſe that Reformation, in the moſt Inſtances, goes no further than a Man's outward Behaviour; yet even this is ſo great a Decency, ſo vaſt an Advantage to the World, ſuch a public Juſtice and Honour done to our moſt excellent and holy Profeſſion of Chriſtianity, by ſhewing it, as it is, an Enemy to all vicious Practices; it is ſo great a Means to retrieve the Reputation of Virtue and Religion, which is now ſo ſunk and even brought into Contempt by the Impunity and Inſolence of Vice and Prophaneneſs, to prevent others falling into ſuch ſcandalous Practices, to keep off the Judgments of God from our Nation, by puniſhing and bringing to Shame all thoſe that openly diſhonour Him; that upon theſe Accounts only 'tis well worth all the Laws of the State that are or can be made againſt Immorality, and all the poſſible Vigour of Magiſtrates who are entruſted with their Execution.

Object. IX. Eug. I have heard it objected that the Deſign of thoſe Laws is only in terrorem; and that if all Penal Statutes were rigorouſly executed there would be no living one by another; it would deſtroy Society.

Th. God forbid, that Wickedneſs ſhould be eſſential to Society. The plain Engliſh of their Objection is that People can't live except they enjoy their Vices; they can't live out of a Tavern or an Ale-Houſe, they can't live without being drunk and lewd, without Swearing, and Curſing, and Gaming, &c. If they be in earneſt, let them die for want of Opportunities ies of Vice, and let us that outlive hem ſee whether the Public will ave any great Loſs by the Humour! But is not this an unſufferable Af-ront to the Civil Government, to ay, that the Laws enacted by it, hich were apparently deſigned for he Advantage, muſt, if executed, urn to the Deſtruction of Society? muſt tell you further, 'tis a great mpertinence in your Objectors to ppoſe, that Laws are therefore not o be executed, becauſe they are in-ended in Terrorem only. All Laws re chiefly intended in Terrorem, I own: ut how? That the Penalties being xacted from ſuch guilty Perſons as ll within the Knowledge and the each of Juſtice, all others who are clined to be guilty of the ſame rimes may, by the Example of ſuch uniſhments, be deterred from com-itting them. This is the Terror hich the Laws are armed with; ut pray what Terror have they hen they are not put in Execution? lo Body fears them, becauſe no ody ſuffers by them; and then, of hat Uſe are they? Execution is e very Life of all Laws; and 'tis onſenſe to ſay, that when any

Law is made, it is not deſigned to be executed. The Government publiſhes it in Print, in Form of an Act of Parliament, with the Queen's Authority in the Face on't; by this Act we find ſuch Penalties entailed upon the due Conviction of ſuch Offences, and the Execution charged upon all Her Majeſty's Juſtices of the Peace. What have we to do in this Caſe, but to ſee that the Commands of Authority be obeyed, and thoſe that diſobey be puniſhed? Her Majeſty has ſent us down no ſecret Inſtructions to diſpenſe with the Execution of this Law; and if She ſhould, it would not warrant our Neglect; becauſe the whole Legiſlative Power has not diſcharged us, nor can do it without a formal Repeal of the Statute. The Parliament agrees to the Execution of the Laws againſt Immorality and Prophaneneſs, by ſtill continuing thoſe Acts in their full Force, without repealing or clogging of them: The Queen declares in Her Proclamation, That 'tis Her earneſt Deſire to have all theſe Penal Statutes put in full Execution. How then ſhall any Body pre-

preſume to know, by ſuch Aſſurances as ſhould govern us, that the Crown and Parliament, which made thoſe Laws, would not have them executed, neither Party declaring any thing but that they would? Nor do we owe ſo much Civility and Reſpect to ſome popular Vices, as to put a Difference betwixt the Laws againſt them, and thoſe againſt Burglary, Murder, or any thing elſe, which may as well be laid aſide as the other; why ſhould not the Cry be made againſt the Execution of theſe Laws too? The Penalty I'm ſure is greater: Death by theſe; Five Shillings, Ten Groats, or Twelve Pence by the other; and if good Nature and good Neighbourhood be to chuſe which Laws of the two ſhould not be executed, methinks the faireſt Plea would lie againſt thoſe that have the ſevereſt Penalty annexed. But the true Secret of the Difference made by ſome Men in the Point of Execution is; that Robbery, Murder, and the like, incroach upon the Safety of their Lives and Eſtates; whereas Drunkenneſs, prophane Swearing, and other Debaucheries, have no further harm in them than as they diſhonour and affront Almighty God, and bring Damnation to the Offender, which the jolly Patrons of Vice are very little concerned for. In ſhort, the Objection is ſcandalous and ſilly; and if they would know what would become of us, were all the Statutes againſt Immorality put in Execution, I'll tell them; we ſhould be that People whom God would love, our Enemies would fear; whom all wiſe Men would admire, and all good Men would bleſs; and if we were in Danger of any thing, it would be, that contemplating the Happineſs of our Country, we ſhould love this World too well, and think too little of the next.

Object. X. Eug. I find, Theotimus, you're very zealous in the Cauſe: But what think you of Objections of another Nature? Such Rigour in exacting pecuniary Penalties, from ordinary and labouring Men eſpecially, will diſable them from paying their Taxes.

Th. If they will be vicious, the Law has thought fit they ſhould pay for't, whatever be the Conſequence.

And I muſt tell you that thoſe Penalties are as much a Part of the Taxes they are bound to pay, as Window-Money, Land-Tax, or any other; both laid upon them by Act of Parliament, only the Profits of the one Her Majeſty takes for public Uſes, and thoſe of the other She gives away to the Poor. Beſide, if any thing be to blame, for diſabling ſuch a Man to pay his Quota to the Government, it is his Vices, the Conſequence of which by Law, is parting with his Money levied upon him on their Account. The Juſtice of Peace is not to be charged with it: He does his Duty; but the Offender is to anſwer for that, who wilfully diſables himſelf, by chuſing rather to pay his Money than reform his Morals.

Eug. By being ſevere upon the Diſorders of publick Houſes, and particularly by not ſuffering them to entertain Company upon the Lord's-Day, I have been told that you, for your own Part, have very much ſunk the Revenue of Exciſe in this Part of the Country. And I aſſure you, Theo- Object. XI.

Theotimus, this Objection is thought to make a conſiderable Figure.

Th. Amongſt the Exciſemen, I ſuppoſe, and the Ale-Houſe-Keepers? But every Man of Senſe and Virtue will be aſhamed of it, and Her Majeſty, if She knew, would never thank them for it. For after two excellent Proclamations She has publiſh'd, "Wherein She charges us to take "effectual Care to prevent all Perſons keeping Taverns, or other "Publick-Houſes whatſoever, from "SELLING Wine, Chocolate, "Coffee, Ale, Beer, or other Liquors, "or RECEIVING or PERMITTING Gueſts to BE or REMAIN IN ſuch their Houſes "ON THE LORD's-DAY, except "in Caſes of Neceſſity and Charity, as we will anſwer it to Almighty God, and upon Pain of "Her higheſt Diſpleaſure: What can be a more inſolent Reflection upon Her, than to inſinuate, that She has ſtill a ſecret Reſerve for Her Revenue to be maintained by the Impieties and Vices of Her People? Is it not to charge Her with the utmoſt Diſſimulation and Hypocriſie, if when She

She commands us to be Temperate and Sober, and particularly to forbear all Tipling in Public-Houſes on the Lord's-Day, in the ſtricteſt Terms that can be, She intends at the ſame time, (as the Objection ſuppoſes) for Her own Advantage, to connive at Intemperance, to allow of Tipling, and diſcourage thoſe Magiſtrates who, in Obedience to Her public Order, would ſuppreſs them? I think 'tis a Concluſion much more decent, that by this Clauſe in Her Proclamation She has openly and ſolemnly diſclaimed all ſuch Profits of Exciſe, as may be raiſed from ſuch immoral Practices.

But further, I deny the Aſſertion it ſelf, That the Revenue of the Crown will really be impaired by prohibiting Tipling and Drunkenneſs. I believe it will appear a reaſonable Computation, that Three Parts in Four of the poor Families in this Kingdom have been reduced to want (if not only, yet chiefly) by haunting Taverns or Ale-Houſes. Eſpecially labouring Men, who very often conſume there on the Lord's-Day what they have gotten all the Week before, and let their Families beg or ſteal for a Sub-Subſiſtance the Week following. 'Tis much the ſame with too many Tradeſmen, who diſſolve the Profits of their Trade in Tipling and good Fellowſhip, which ought to be laid out in neceſſary Expences at Home, or laid up to make Proviſion for their Children; and by this Means either they, or their Poſterity, or both, muſt fall into Decay. Now I ſuppoſe you will grant me, that as the Number of poor and ruined Families encreaſes in a Nation, the Prince that governs muſt find a proportionable Decay in his Revenue: On the other Side, all ſuch Laws duly executed, as keep Men by Sobriety, Temperance, and Frugality, in a proſperous and thriving Condition, do moſt effectually provide at once for the Happineſs of the People and for the Riches of the Prince, and notwithſtanding a preſent inconſiderable Fall in the Exciſe, are really the beſt Means in the World to eſtabliſh the Royal Revenue, by providing for the Sufficiency of thoſe that are to contribute to it.

Object. XII. Eug. I am fully ſatisfied in what you ſay; and yet perhaps there may be be no great harm in taking a little Refreſhment in a Public-Houſe, after Divine Service is over. Whether may not this fall within the Proviſion both of the Proclamation and the Statutes, as a Caſe of Neceſſity or Charity?

Th. In Anſwer to this, I ask in the firſt Place, why ſo much need of Refreſhment on the Sunday-Evening? Is the the Service of God ſuch a mighty Fatigue? It is ſeldom any where of above Two Hours continuance in the Morning, and as long in the Afternoon, with an Interval of Two Hours Reſt betwixt them: And I dare appeal to the Conſciences of thoſe that plead for Refreſhment in a Tavern or an Ale-Houſe, after ſuch hard Labour in the Churches, whether they take any conſiderable Pains in Religion, either in their Families or in private, before Church-time, that may contribute over and above to the ſpending of their Spirits. I doubt it's too true, that thoſe who inſiſt upon the Objection, (which I dare ſay Eugenius does not, as from his own Judgment, but from the common Cant of thoſe that are intereſted in the Pleas for Drinking,) neither trouble themſelves much with Religion at Home, nor with Attention to what's done at Church; but either ſleep away the Prayers and Sermon, or trifle away moſt of the time in worldly Thoughts of their Pleaſure or their Buſineſs; and therefore cannot be ſuppoſed to ſuffer any great Conſumption of their Spirits by the Service of the Day. But if they muſt have Refreſhment, why can't they have it at their own Houſes? In Truth, Refreſhment is but a Pretence for Exceſs and Drunkenneſs in theſe Caſes. If Company meets together in a Public-Houſe on the Sunday-Evening, when there is no Danger of other Buſineſs that ſhall call them away, who ſhall tell them the critical Minute when they are ſufficiently refreſhed? Except the Conſtable beat up their Quarters, they ſit very contentedly Hour after Hour, and call for Pint after Pint, and make themſelves Judges of their Refreſhment, till they're able to judge of nothing at all. If you ſtill ask, What harm there is in going to a Public-Houſe, for only one Hour or two, and to ſtay no longer, I might tell you, that 'tis enough that the Laws have forbidden it, and that Her Majeſty has reinforced thoſe Laws, and agreed with them in Her own Proclamation to forbid it. The Statutes * againſt Tipling extend to every Day of the Week and every Hour of every Day, (for any thing that appears in them to the contrary,) by Conſequence, to every Hour on Sunday, either before, in, or after time of Divine Service, as well as (and in Reaſon, much more than) on any other Day. The Statute of 29 Car. 2. againſt Prophanation of the Lord's-Day, which ſome that are retained for Vice, have declared is nothing at all to our Purpoſe, enacts, "That all and every Perſon or Perſons whatſoever ſhall, on every "Lord's-Day, apply themſelves to "the Obſervation of the ſame, by "exerciſing themſelves thereon in "the DUTIES of PIETY and "true RELIGION, Publicly and "PRIVATELY. Now if to ſit drinking in an Ale-Houſe be either a public or private Duty of Piety, I ſubmit; but if it be (as certainly it is) a Prophanation of the Lord's-Day, a Miſ-

are

* 1 Jac. c. 9. 4 Jac. c. 5. 21 Jac. c. 7.

Miſpence of that ſacred time which we are eſpecially obliged to employ in a pious Retirement at Home, or in inſtructing and reading to our Families for their Improvement in Virtue and their eternal Happineſs. I ſuppoſe this Law (at leaſt implicitly) forbids it. The Clauſe that follows will juſtifie ſuch a Conſequence. "—That no Tradeſman, Artificer, "Workman, Labourer, or other Per- "ſon whatſoever, ſhall do or exerciſe "any worldly Labour, Buſineſs, or "Work of THEIR ORDINARY "CALLINGS upon the Lord's "Day, or any Part thereof; Works of "Neceſſity and Charity only excepted. Now what's the ordinary Calling of a Taverner, but to draw and ſell his Wine? Of an Ale-Houſe-Keeper, but to do the ſame with his Ale? Of him that keeps a Coffee-Houſe, but to make and ſell Coffee, Tea, &c? Therefore this is plainly exerciſing their Trades on the Lord's-Day, contrary to the expreſs Tenor of that Statute; and thoſe that go to ſuch Houſes to drink there, occaſion them ſo to do. And if the Statute makes it unlawful for them to ſell their

Li-

Liquor, the Reaſon of the Law extends alſo to prohibit others from ſitting there to drink it. The Laws of the State are, in theſe Caſes, no more than a Reinforcement (upon Temporal Penalties) of the Law of God. Pray turn to Iſaiah, If thou turn away thy Foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy Pleaſure on my Holy Day, and call the Sabbath a Delight, the Holy of the Lord, honourable, and ſhalt honour him, not doing thy own Ways, nor finding thy own Pleaſure, nor ſpeaking thy own Words; then ſhalt thou delight thy ſelf in the Lord, &c. Judge now, whether an Ale-Houſe Refreſhment be not finding our own Pleaſure; and whether the Keeper of a Public-Houſe, that ſupplies them with it, is not doing his own Ways, exerciſing his Trade, and prophaning that ſacred Day. As for the Pretences of Neceſſity and Charity, (the only Caſes excepted either by Divine or Humane Laws) they do not reach the preſent Queſtion (allowing for Travellers, and ſuch as, being Strangers in a Town, are forced to lodge and eat at Inns): Neceſſity it is not, becauſe they either do not really need the Refreſhment they plead for, or if they Iſa. 58. 13.

do, they may have it at Home; and Charity it is not, becauſe they both neglect themſelves and their Families the while, and alſo keep the Maſter and Servants of the Public-Houſe, where they ſit drinking, from employing their time religiouſly, as they ought to do.

Eug. May it not ſometimes happen, do you think, that Two or Three very ſober and good Men may really need Refreſhment, after the Service is over? And why ſhall they be debarred the Convenience of a Public-Houſe, for an Hour, or half an Hour, where perhaps they may entertain themſelves with Diſcourſe ſuitable enough to the Day?

Th. If publick Houſes be kept open for ſome who will be ſober and good, they muſt be open for others that will not be ſo. For who ſhall make the Diſtinction? -- exclude this Company, and admit of that? Would not the Tavern and the Coffee-Houſe, that pretend to ſuch a Nicety, loſe all their Cuſtom? 'Twould be very impertinent if they ſhould offer at it; either all muſt be kept out, or none. Beſides, thoſe that are truly good and ſober Men will rather go without this Refreſhment (were it more neceſſary for them them than it is) than ſet a public ill Example (by being ſeen there at ſuch Times) to others, who may neither have the ſame Occaſion, nor uſe it with the ſame Sobriety, as they would. We are commanded to abſtain from all APPEARANCE of Evil: Be our own Management of ſuch Liberties never ſo temperate and grave, yet if it give Pretence to thoſe who won't behave themſelves ſo well, to conclude (by ſeeing us go in) that there is no Harm in taking their Diverſion there, it certainly has the Appearance of Evil, and does a great deal of Miſchief, as it encourages a great deal of Exceſs and Idleneſs; and further, as we ſtill keep the People of the Houſe from private Employments of Religion, and oblige them to exerciſe their Trades as well as thoſe that come there with a worſe Intention. 1 Theſſ. 5. 22.

Eug. Pardon me, Theotimus, I can't but think that the prohibiting Tipling was only deſigned the more effectually to prohibit Drunkenneſs; ſo that if a Man be not diſordered with Drink, the End of the Law ſeems to be anſwered. Object. XIII.

Th. And pardon me, Eugenius, if I can't be of your Mind. It's true,

1. Jac. 1. cap. 9. the Preamble of the Statute ſpeaks chiefly againſt the Entertainment of lewd and idle People to conſume their Money and their Time in lewd and drunken Manner; yet compare this Clauſe with the Beginning of the ſame Section, and you will find that the only allowed Uſe of Inns, Ale-Houſes, &c. is for the lodging of Travellers upon their Road from Place to Place, and to ſupply the Wants of ſuch as are not able, by greater Quantities, to make their Proviſion of Victuals; and therefore when Company ſits drinking, who are neither Travellers lodging there, nor ſuch as* they invite to them, nor Labourers who have their Diet in ſuch Houſes, and at the uſual times of Eating, the Statute is ſuppoſed to reach them, and that this is the true Meaning of what the Preamble oppoſes to the right Uſe of Inns, the Entertainment of lewd and idle People, to ſpend their Money and their Time in lewd and drunken Manner. However, from the different Penalty laid upon Tipling and Drunkenneſs, (the latter Five Shillings, the other but Ten Groats) 'tis plain, the Law conſiders them as different Offences, and diſtinctly ſtinctly puniſhable. If Tipling were only to be interpreted by Drunkenneſs, the Crime would be the ſame, and the Puniſhment would be ſo too.

* 1 Jac. 9. §. 2.

Eug. I remember ſomething in the Statute of an Allowance for an Hour in Public-Houſes; therefore I ſuppoſe we muſt prove the Company has been above that time before we can convict either the Houſe or them. Object. XIV.

Th. Pray turn to the Statute, and you'll find your Miſtake. The Hour that runs in your Mind is only allowed to Labourers, &c. Dieting in a publick-Houſe. —— "Labouring and "Handicrafts Men, upon the uſual "working Days, for one Hour at Din-"ner time, to take their Diet in an "Ale-Houſe. —— But not a Syllable of any ſtated Time whatever in any other Part of this Act, or of any other Act relating to theſe Matters. The Statutes have forbid the Practice at large, without any Reſtriction of Expence, or Time, or Quantity of Drink, that I can find: which gives us, I think, ſufficient Reaſon to conclude; that being found there in a ſettled Poſture of Drinking, without neceſſary Buſineſs, whatever their Stay or their Expence has been, is what the Law intends by Tipling. Perhaps I ſhall need but one Argument to convince you of my Notion. The Statutes have made the VIEW of a * Juſtice of Peace, one Way of convicting the Company and the Houſe that entertains them, which ſhall be accounted ſufficient Proof whereupon to levy the Penalties. Now can the Law be guilty of ſo great an Impertinence, as it would be, to ſuppoſe a Juſtice of Peace to ſtand by for an Hour or Two in the Room where the Company is, to obſerve what Money they ſpend, or what Time they ſtay? Or that the Company ſhould be ſuch Fools to ſit Tipling on with his Worſhip at their Backs, on purpoſe to give him an Opportunity of convicting them? So that the View of a Juſtice of Peace could never form a Conviction at all, (and yet the Statutes have expreſly made it one) if the Punctilio's of Time and Expence were eſſential to the Merits of the Cauſe. Therefore certainly by this VIEW the Statute refers to muſt, in Reaſon and good Senſe, be underſtood, a tranſient View of the Company, the ſeeing them together, with Drink before them, and in a ſettled Poſture, how long, or how little a while ſoever they had been there.

* 1 Jac. 1. cap. 9. 4 Jac. 1. cap. 5. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 7.

ny,

Eug. Well, Theotimus, I'll give up that for gone then. But why don't we put theſe Statutes againſt Tipling in Execution every Day of the Week (to which they will extend) as well as on Sundays. Object. XV.

Th. To ſhew that the Summum Jus, and ſumma Injuria, that is made ſuch a popular Cant in theſe Caſes, is not at all intended by us. The Laws are in Force for every Day of the Week, becauſe they were never repealed; but in the Courſe of an hundred Years, and the Execution long ago left off, perhaps we may ſuppoſe them ſomewhat obſolete, and it might look like a Hardſhip to put them in Execution, except ſo far as ſome new Statute, or a Royal Proclamation, revives them. Now the 29 Car. 2. c. 7. may be interpreted to revive them, ſo far as they relate to the Lord's-Day; but however Her Majeſty's Proclamation ſufficiently does it: And this extending them only to the Sundays, we preſume to execute them no farther.

And 'tis ſtrange to me, with what Modeſty People can cry out in theſe Caſes of the Summum Jus, the Rigour of the Law, when they have but a Seventh Part of it.

Object. XVI. Eug. You hinted, I remember, that if Men want Refreſhment, they may have it at Home, or in ſome other private Houſe. Don't you think then, that if People ſend for Drink to their own Houſes, and make up a Company to drink it, there is more Danger of Exceſs (and with leſs Notice taken) than in a Tavern or a Public-Ale-Houſe?

Th. No indeed, I don't. Becauſe the more in Number your Company is, the more likely you are to ſet in for hard Drinking; and thoſe that deſign for a Public-Houſe, do generally affect as much Company with them as they can. Beſide the Difference of the Place; you have no Reſtraint upon you in a Tavern from that natural Air of Civility and good Order that awes you in a private Houſe, whether it be your own or your Friends. But ſuppoſe all this to be only Speculation, and that People generally drink to as great Exceſs in Pri-

Private as in Public-Houſes, they are ſtill as liable to be known and convict of Drunkenneſs in the one as in the other: for all the Company, but the Maſter of the Houſe, are to go Home thro' the Streets, and if they be drunk, are as likely to be diſcovered and brought to Puniſhment, as if they were going from a Tavern or an Ale-Houſe.

Eug. But in theſe you are always in Danger of a peeping Conſtable to diſturb you; and the Fear of being ſeen in Diſorder by him (who has not the Opportunity of inſpecting them in a private Houſe) keeps them upon their Guard againſt Exceſs.

Th. What has the Conſtable to do in this Argument? The Poſition you maintain, is, That the Laws againſt Tipling ſhould not be executed; your Reaſon, ſo far as I apprehend it, is, that if they be, 'tis only to drive People out of Public-Houſes, who will betake themſelves with more Danger of Exceſs to Private. This ſuppoſes that if we let them alone in ſuch Public-Houſe, for Fear of the ſame or worſe Diſorders elſewhere, thoſe Laws are then not executed, and conſequently ly no Officers trouble themſelves with any ſuch Inſpection. But be this as it will, the SCANDAL of haunting Taverns and Ale-Houſes (eſpecially upon the Lord's-Day) is what the Law very juſtly provides againſt. And by puniſhing this we give at leaſt a public Check to the Impudence of Vice, and therefore the Magiſtrate is bound to ſee to it, ſo far as the Law directs and allows him, tho' he can't extend his Inſpection to private Houſes.

Object. XVII. Eug. Conſider again, Theotimus, that ſeveral Men have got ill Habits of Vice, and can't leave them off on a ſudden. 'Tis ſevere to take the Advantage of the Law againſt ſuch; to puniſh them for what they cannot help.

Th. Well, carry your Maxim as far as it will go. Here's a ſturdy Beggar comes to my Door, that has been brought up by his Parents to make a Trade of Begging, (as 'tis very well known moſt of your Strolers are); This idle Way of living is become habitual to him by Education and many Years Practice: Is it ſevere to take up this Fellow and ſend him to the Houſe of Correction, or into Her Majeſty's Service? Is his Idleneſs neſs the more excuſable, becauſe 'tis habitual? Or is he not ſo much the father to be puniſhed, becauſe (thro' this Habit of Idleneſs) there is no other way to make him apply himſelf to Labour and an honeſt Livelihood? The Caſe is the ſame with a Pick-pocket, High-way-man, and the like; that have either been trained up to Roguery from their Youth, or contracted a Habit of theſe Practices by Uſe, and know not how to take up and live honeſtly. Would you ſave them from the Gallows, becauſe Theiving is become a ſecond Nature to them? Sure you would think they deſerved the leſs Favour, by being long practiſed Rogues, and leſs likely to reform. He that has made ſuch a Beaſt of his Nature, that he cannot be eaſie, but when he is tipling or drunk, is ſo much the more ſcandalous an Offender, and the more fit to be made a public Example of. What Room there is for Mercy in the Law, is by all diſcreet Magiſtrates determined to the firſt Offence, or to him that is very ſeldom guilty, or that was unawares ſurpriſed into Exceſs, being otherwiſe of a good and ſober Character; or that is ſorry for his Fault, and promiſes to reform; but never to a notorious, hardened and habitual Sinner, who ſticks to his Vices, on pretence he knows not how to leave them. But do you really believe theſe Gentlemen, that they cannot forego their ill Habits? Indeed their Condition's very dangerous, the Diſtemper has gained upon them exceedingly: But a good Reſolution to be cured, will go a great Way; and except the Grace of God, there is not a more powerful Incentive of Reſolution in ſuch Caſes, than ſuffering the Penalty of the Law. Would they be willing to run the Expence of Five Shillings every Day for being drunk, and to pay their Money for their Exceſs in the Face of their Neighbour? 'Tis not to be doubted but they would find a Way to reſtrain themſelves rather than undergo the Shame, and pay ſo dear for a drunken Habit: For tho' People love their Vices, yet generally they love their Money better, or at leaſt they will grow weary of them when they find them ſo very expenſive. This will make them ſtrong enough to break through ill Habits of Vice;

nd in time may make them wiſe nough to embrace good Habits of Virtue; or however, reduce them to n exterior Temperance and Sobriety.

Eug. But Swearing is, it may be, harder to be forſaken than any; —a ingle Word or two in Converſation grown habitual to them by Uſe; it paſſes from them unobſerved; they don't know when they do it.

Th. Yet often puniſhing will teach them. They will ſoon learn to ſet a Guard upon their Tongues when they perceive their Pockets bound for their Behaviour. How many habitual Swearers do we find, that (if they be not in Drink at the ſame time) know how to guard themſelves in grave and ſober Company, when they fear to be either reproved or informed againſt! How many Thouſands, who were notorious for this Vice, have actually left it off within theſe few Years, as it grew out of Faſhion amongſt Gentlemen! Therefore Habit is nothing but Pretence; if People can leave it off upon ſuch Conſiderations as Faſhion, or Saving of their Money, they can have nothing to plead, why the Law ſhould not oblige them

ſo to do. To ſuppoſe however the utmoſt that can be ſuppoſed, that the Habit of Swearing has gained ſo much upon them, that they really do not know when they do it: Does not this make the Offender the more criminal, and the Execution of the Law more neceſſary for his Recovery? Moreover, the miſchievous Conſequence of ſuch a Habit, (which I mentioned to you * before) as it introduces Perjury, will convince you how proper an Object it is of the Reſentment of the civil Government. Beſide 'tis ſuch an impudent and open Prophanation of the moſt ſacred Name of God and Chriſt, that every Chriſtian Magiſtrate is obliged by his Religion, by the Allegiance he owes to Heaven, to puniſh it ſo far as the Law empowers him.

* Page 7.

Eug. God forbid that I ſhould juſtifie or ſkreen ſuch Vices: But you muſt take me right. I only propoſe theſe things as popular Objections, which I am very well pleaſed to hear anſwered. And therefore you muſt give me leave to proceed. There is a natural Shame in Vice, (as in Lewdneſs, Drunkenneſs, &c.) and if that

wont reform a Debauchee, methinks punishment by Law should rather exasperate.

Th. The Law is supposed not to punish, till other milder Methods be used to reclaim him. Those Methods, I take to be the natural Modesty you speak of, the Instructions of the Pulpit, the Advice of Friends, the Discountenance from good Men, and Warnings given of the Penalty he incurs. If these be all overborn by Obstinacy in Vice, we have no other Way to attempt his Recovery but the Ense recidendum of the Laws, and we cannot justifie our selves in Point of Charity to the Offender, if we neglect this Method to reclaim him, whatever be the Consequence. Whether they will hear, says God, or whether they will forbear, yet they shall know that there has been a Prophet amongst them. At their Peril be it, if their Constitution be such as to turn their Physic into Poyson; We must do our Duty. But allowing that for the present it may, in many Instances, exasperate, 'tis to be hoped they will be wiser in time, when they consider, that what the Magistrate does, he is bound by his Oath

Ezek. 2. 5.

Oath and by the Laws to do; and 'tis in Charity to the Offender that the Laws have ſo obliged him. However, Puniſhment by Law, as it makes the Offender a public Example, may not only do a great deal of Good to others, but alſo expoſes him to Shame, which he cannot avoid, tho' perhaps he may have ſtifled in a great Meaſure the natural Reproaches of his Conſcience: So that if Shame and Diſgrace for his Vices be a likely Means to draw him off from them, the Law, by bringing theſe upon him, may very probably effect the Cure.

Object. XIX. Eug. But when the Fear of God and his Eternal Judgments can't prevail, do you think the Fear of humane Laws and Penalties will ſignifie much?

Th. Yes, I do. I grant that with a conſiderate Man, who reaſons juſtly and diſcreetly, the former is an Argument of infinitely greater Weight than the latter: For who among us can dwell with the devouring Fire? Who among us can dwell with everlaſting Burnings? But how few vicious People are there that ever give themſelves the uneaſie Entertainment of ſuch Thoughts! On the contrary, they do what what they can to ſtifle and raſe the very Belief of them out of their Minds, or look upon theſe things as at ſuch a Diſtance, that they would hope they may not prove true, that God will be better than his Threatnings, or however that they ſhall have time enough to examine ſuch Arguments hereafter. Whereas the Puniſhment inflicted by humane Laws is a Matter of preſent Senſe, they ſee and feel it actually upon them, and have no Power to ſhuffle aſide the Apprehenſion or Conſideration of it; therefore this may terrifie them when the other does not: And in Truth we have too much Reaſon to obſerve, that the Fear of Man prevails much more generally than the Fear of God.

Eug. Why may not the good Example of a Magiſtrate be a more effectual Diſgrace and Diſcountenance to Vice, than puniſhing it? Object. XX.

Th. The good Example of a Magiſtrate is unqueſtionably of great Uſe, nay, 'tis abſolutely neceſſary to the due Diſcouragement of Vice: But how? As it gives Authority, Spirit, and Reputation to what he does when he puniſhes for it; for conſidered apart from this, 'tis little more than the Example of a private Gentleman. Can you ever expect, that a Swearing Juſtice of Peace ſhould ſet another Man in the Stocks for the ſame Fault? Or if he do, muſt he not bluſh to ſee himſelf at Liberty? Will any drunken Magiſtrate in the Kingdom care to fall hard upon the Debaucheries of Public-Houſes, who often contributes to them himſelf? And if he ſhould, would it not be extremely ridiculous? Would it not be reaſonable to ſuſpect ſuch Men as puniſh in others the Vices which themſelves enjoy, that their pretended Zeal is but a Project for Reputation, or to ſerve ſome private End? And therefore except they reform themſelves, as well as practiſe upon the Neighbourhood, every Body will laugh at them as only acting a Part, and they will create in the People, not ſo much a Diſguſt to Vice, as to the Pretences of Reformation, carried on with ſuch a viſible and plain Hypocriſie. On the other ſide, a Juſtice of Peace, who is himſelf a temperate, virtuous, and religious Man, has a mighty Advantage from his Character, when he ſets about bout ſuppreſſing Vice. His Proceedings appear to be from Conſcience and Principle, not from Oſtentation and Intereſt, and therefore carry with them an Authority the others have not, are better received, and more effectual. But tho' a good Example be much, it is not all a Magiſtrate has to do in theſe Caſes. I am not guilty of Houſe-breaking, Murder, or Robbing on the High-way; but is this a ſufficient Excuſe to me for not apprehending or committing thoſe that are? What is it diſtinguiſhes the Magiſtrate from a private Man, if it be not that, over and above the Obligation he has upon himſelf to keep the Laws, he is alſo appointed and empowered to ſee that others keep them. His Commiſſion runs, that he ſhall both KEEP and CAUSE TO BE KEPT all Ordinances and Statutes, &c. and certainly the one half of his Commiſſion can never be the whole of his Duty.

Eug. Prudence however is to be uſed; we may do more Good by holding in a little, than by too open a Declaration, which may ſpoil all. Object. XXI.

Th. But how? Will the Sons of Luxury and Profaneneſs, who are known to be notorious Slaves to Senſe, be more eaſily reclaimed without the Fear of Puniſhment than with it? To what purpoſe then are any Laws at all, if People would live better without them? Or any Magiſtrates for the Execution of ſuch Laws, if the Execution of them would do more Harm than Good? How comes it to paſs that the vicious and prophane did not reform before theſe Laws were made or executed? Why do they not do it now in thoſe Places where, by the great Prudence of our Magiſtrates, the Laws do ſtill lie dormant? Prudence to be ſure will run thro' a wiſe Man's Conduct, and ſhould eſpecially be the Qualification of a Magiſtrate: But when under the ſpecious Pretence of Prudence, he is drawn to a plain Neglect of his Duty, this Wiſdom deſcends not from above, but is earthly, ſenſual, and deviliſh. 'Tis ſecular Intereſt and the Fear of Man diſguiſed under the Name of Diſcretion. Worldly Wiſdom you may call it; but that we all know is but another Word for Fooliſhneſs with God; and Fooliſhneſs it is, when for Fear of diſobliging the proudeſt and moſt powerful powerful Mortal upon Earth, we diſobey the Commands, neglect the Honour, and deſpiſe the Favour of our eternal Judge in Heaven. And after all, Eugenius, what do you mean by the Objection? How is it that holding in a little will do more Good, and an open Declaration will ſpoil all? I have often heard it urg'd, but, in Truth, I never well underſtood it.

James 3. 15.

1 Cor. 3. 19.

Eug. Why, all things are to be done by Degrees; fair and ſoftly you know goes far; and too much Heat ſeldom does Good.

Th. Ill Men make haſt to be wicked, why then ſhould not others be as much in haſt to reclaim them? They are running headlong to a miſerable Eternity, and can we expect to overtake and bring them back by going fair and ſoftly? To him that KNOWS to do Good, and DOES IT NOT, (ſays St. James) to him it is SIN. Why ſhould we loſe Time? The Seaſon may be gone, before we enter upon Action; and then will not the eternal Ruine of thoſe poor Creatures, whom (by God's Bleſſing) we might have reduced, lie very much at our Door, who are going ſo Jam. 4. 17.

fair and ſoftly after them? The Apoſtle's Advice is very different (and I'm ſure of better Authority) from this Proverb; it is, that we ſhould redeem the Time, ἐξαγοραζόμενοι τὸν καιρὸν, [buying up every Opportunity, as thoſe that would make the beſt of their Market,] and this it ſeems is the true Wiſdom; for ſo run the Words; See that ye walk circumſpectly, not as Fools, but as WISE, redeeming the Time—. Eph. 5. 15, 16

I do not deny, that in the Work of Reformation, as well as in other things, Steps are to be taken one after another; a prudent Method being a good Introduction to Succeſs: But this is not to be made an Excuſe for doing nothing at all. Coldneſs in the Cauſe of Virtue will do more harm than even imprudent Heat. For tho' you ſhould happen to ſtep a little too faſt in ſome Inſtances, you have however entred your Proteſt in a public Manner againſt Vice, and alarmed the Guilty with an Aſſurance that they ſhall not be tolerated; Whereas by being cold and negligent in the Matter, you give them occaſion to believe you're not in earneſt, or that you have ſome private Intereſt to drive, by by puniſhing one Vice or one Perſon and not another; or that you look upon it as a Matter of Form only, in a ſeeming Obedience to the Government, intending ſtill to be as indulgent as you can. And thus inſtead of wiſely and prudently ſerving Virtue, you will moſt effectually betray it.

Eug. But ſome Regard muſt be had to timing things aright, to the Genius of the Place, and the Manner in which we proceed.

Th. The Time for a good Man to puniſh Vice is, I think, as ſoon as he has Authority and Power in his Hands to do it; except he is content to be chargeable with all the Prophaneneſs and Debauchery that paſſes the mean while. What you intend by conſidering the Genius of the Place, I don't ſo well underſtand. If you mean, whether the People be generally notorious for Wickedneſs, or generally good and ſober, with ſome few Exceptions; 'tis nothing to the purpoſe; for you are to puniſh ſuch Inſtances of Wickedneſs as you find, be they more or fewer. If, whether the People will bear the Execution of theſe Laws, and how they will take it; 'tis as little: For Magiſtracy is a very precarious Inſtitution, if we muſt ask the Leave and Conſent of the Populace, to execute the eſtabliſh'd Laws.

Eug. I will give you an Inſtance or two which will further explain to you what I mean by the Manner we are to proceed in. Tis hard to judge when a Man is drunk; much muſt be allowed to Refreſhment and Cheerfulneſs, and Care muſt be taken to make no Convictions upon Uncertainties and ſtraining of Evidence; for that may bring a great Reflection upon the whole Deſign of executing theſe Laws.

Object. XXII.

Th. I'm ready to grant the Subſtance of your Objection: But what Service will this do to the Conſequence you would inſinuate from it, that becauſe 'tis ſomewhat difficult to judge when a Man is drunk, (eſpecially in the lower degrees of Drunkenneſs) it were better not to put the Laws againſt that Vice in Execution at all? On the contrary, they ſhould the rather be inſiſted on, that People may be kept upon their Guard, and not dare to approach the Borders of Exceſs.

Eug.

Eug. Pray what do you take to be the juſt and proper Indications of this Vice?

Th. I take a Man to be drunk when he reels notoriouſly in the Streets, or upon his Horſe; when he ſtammers unuſually in his Speech; and when he appears not to have the Command of his Reaſon as at other times. Beſides which, I ſuppoſe you will eaſily agree, that a naſty Diſcharge of Vomit exhibits Drunkenneſs barefaced.

Eug. Softly, my good Friend; the Man may be diſordered by ſome innocent and ſudden Illneſs, that may produce all theſe Effects, may cauſe him to vomit, or not to walk or ride ſo ſtrait as he uſes to do; a ſlippery Stone may throw his Foot aſide when he can't help it; he may have a natural Infirmity in his Speech; and his Head may be affected by ſome Accident or Misfortune, and not by Drink.

Th. I never found Eugenius guilty of trifling before, and I beg he would not begin now. When you ſee a Man vomit or ſtagger, is it not eaſie to ask him how he does? And will not a prudent Man be able to judge by his Anſwer what's the matter with him? Or can you not by Enquiry (then or afterwards) learn from any other Hand whether he has any ſuch ſuppoſed Illneſs upon him? He faulters remarkably in his Speech, but if he always does ſo, and if what he ſays be ſenſible and rational, you may ſuppoſe it to be an innocent Infirmity. If otherwiſe, you will ſoon perceive the Occaſion of it. His Head, you'll ſay, may be touched with a Diſtemper: But how comes it to paſs, that a Man in a high Fever and a Delirium, is ſuffered to go abroad? Suppoſe him crazed, half-witted, or mad; yet theſe Misfortunes, however they may be brought to anſwer for his Head, can never affect his Heels; and tho' they may excuſe the Nonſenſe of his Words, they'll hardly keep him in Countenance for the Injury he does his Syllables. If he has been taken ill ſuddenly, you will have other phyſical Symptoms to form a Judgment by; for Nature muſt be in a violent Ferment to be thrown into ſuch Alterations by the ſudden Force of a Diſtemper. In ſhort, the Diſcovery's

ſo eaſie, and theſe good-natur'd Suppoſitions are ſo very weak, that even the Patrons of Vice themſelves, with the ſame Breath they urge them, would laugh at us, if we ſhould believe them. And well they may: When a Boy of Fourteen or Fifteen ſhall readily and truly determine (if he ſees a Man) whether he be drunk or ſober, by his too often ſeeing Inſtances of both ſorts, which gives him a Notion of the Difference, beyond all the Formality of Rules.

Eug. I confeſs there's no great Weight in the Objection; but there are thoſe that make a wonderful Flouriſh with it, when they have a Mind to bully the Laws, that they may be drunk ſecurely. However, Theotimus, 'tis fit that both we and the Evidence ſhould be very careful that no Convictions be made upon a Miſtake.

Th. Aye, by all Means: God forbid that any Man ſhould ſuffer for what he was not really guilty of, tho' the Penalty were ten times ſmaller than it is. I entirely agree with you in that.

Eug. I will propoſe another Difficulty. The Statutes forbid the Selling Obj. XXIII.

Goods upon the Lord's-Day, and lay a Fine upon Butchers and other Tradeſmen that do it: Now there may be a Neceſſity for ſeveral Goods to be ſold on that Day; as Meat, Grocery, and the like. And when an Information of this kind is brought you, how do you know what occaſion there was for them in the buying, and by conſequence, how will you know when to puniſh? For Caſes of Neceſſity are excepted by the Law. Some Allowances are to be made to Forgetfulneſs of providing theſe the Night before, and to ſome unforeſeen Occaſions that may make it neceſſary to ſend for them on the Sunday; but this neither the Tradeſman that ſells, the Evidence that informs, nor you that ſit as Judge upon the Caſe, can poſſibly be aſſured of always; I mean, whether any ſuch Excuſe may be truly pleaded or no. Is it not better to allow the moſt favourable Latitude, and rather wink at many things unneceſſarily bought and ſold, than to puniſh upon ſuch frequent Uncertainties as the Execution of this Law will expoſe you to?

29 Car. 2. c. 7.

3 Car. 1. c. 1.

Th.

Th. In Anſwer to this, I ſay, thoſe Uncertainties are not ſo great as you imagine: Where there is indeed a Neceſſity, it is to be allowed for; but the Juſtice of Peace, to whom the Information is brought, is ſtill left Judge of this Neceſſity; and if he be not ſatisfied with the Excuſe, he may proceed to puniſh. And to ſhow you that he is not like to be very often hard put to it to decide the Matter, I will conſider what there is that can pretend to Allowance in the two Excuſes you ſuggeſt. As to Forgetfulneſs, I think there need not be much Abatement on that Score. When People ſee the Laws are ſtrictly put in Execution, 'tis not to be doubted they will find a way to remember what they want in due time; they will ſend on Saturday-Evening, when they know they can't be ſupplied on Sunday; or if, thro' Forgetfulneſs, they ſuffer an Inconvenience once or twice, it will make them think more ſeaſonably for the future; and if you ſtill ſuppoſe their Memories to fail them now and then, is it not better they ſhould undergo ſome trifling Inconvenience, as often as that happens, than that the Scan-

Scandal ſhould be ſuffered of making all Days alike, and prophaning the ſacred Time devoted to Religion, by buying and ſelling, in Contempt both of the Laws of God and Man? The other Suppoſition you make of Accidents and unforeſeen Occaſions, that may require to be ſupplied on that Day, will lie in a little room too; for I take it only to extend to ſuch things as are requiſite by way of Medicine, Surgery, or Neceſſities of that kind, which will very rarely be ſought for any where but in an Apothecary's Shop; and that, I believe, no Body would trouble themſelves to ſo little purpoſe as to inform of.

Eug. And is this all the Allowance you're willing to make? What if a Friend or two come in to Dine with me unexpected. I muſt provide for them and their Servants ſomething more than would have done for my own Family?

Th. The Impiety and Impertinence of Mankind (it's true) may ſometimes lay this Hardſhip upon you; but the leſs you incourage it, the leſs you will be troubled with it. When they ſee by the Proviſion you have made, that you

you don't care to have your Servants hurried on that Day, good Manners will teach them a due Reſerve in this Point for the future, and they will learn to make their Viſits more ſeaſonably. But perhaps it is not uſual to go to dine with a Gentleman at his Country-Seat upon the Sunday, or in a great Town, except invited; or any where, except he be either an intimate Friend, or a Perſon of conſiderable Figure and Eſtate. If a Friend, they muſt expect to be treated without Ceremony, and take the Freedom of his Table as they find it: If a Man of Quality and Fortune, he keeps a conſtant Table for his own Family, which he need not be aſhamed of upon the unexpected Coming in of Three or Four Strangers. However, to give your Objection its utmoſt Scope, ſuppoſe a Caſe may happen, in which ſomething more than ordinary will be requiſite in your Entertainment, and that this Neceſſity is grown upon you by ſurprize; yet conſider, that our Reverence to that ſacred Day, to the Honour of God, and the Laws of our Country, ought certainly to take Place of our Reſpect to priprivate Friendſhips and Acquaintance; eſpecially when what you are ſuppoſed to want is indeed not neceſſary to the Refreſhment and Support of thoſe whom you entertain (for leſs than People think of will ſupply the real Neceſſities of Nature); but is only Part of the Garniture and Pomp of Luxury, a ſuperfluous Crowding of a Table with a Set of Diſhes, which (if the Occaſion was not foreſeen) may very well be diſpenced with, rather than encourage Trade upon a Sunday. I will only obſerve further, that tho' the general Clauſe in the Statute of 29 Car. 2. prohibiting the Exerciſe of all Trades and Callings on that Day, makes an expreſs Proviſion for Caſes of Neceſſity and Charity; yet in that of 3 Car. 1. wherein Butchers (who are not mentioned in the other Statute) are particularly forbid to kill or ſell Victuals upon the Lord's-Day, there is not ſo much as one Word of a Suppoſition, that any Caſes of Neceſſity can happen, which ſhould need to be allowed for upon that Law.

Eug. Well, Theotimus, I have no luck with my Objections; and yet, like a harden'd Gameſter, I'll play on.

on. This whole Undertaking of executing the Penal Laws againſt Prophaneneſs and Debauchery is new, and looks odd. In the Country eſpecially; where People have thought theſe many Years they had nothing to take Care of but their Rent and their Taxes, and will think it ſtrange, that Religion and good Manners ſhould be palm'd upon them now. And as for great Towns, they have long enjoyed a Liberty of Vice, as well as Privileges of Trade, and are as ready to inſiſt upon that by Preſcription, as upon theſe by Charter: So that they will be ready to wonder what this new Doctrine means. Obj. XXIV.

Th. And I can give you an Inſtance of one great Town, whoſe Trade has been evidently impair'd, and almoſt wholly ruined, by the Liberty they have enjoyed in Vice; and yet, as you ſay, the Inhabitants are ſtill too fond of it. But ſuppoſe the Undertaking to reduce it be new, I'm ſure the Obligation ſo to do is old enough, as old as the Laws are by which we are empowered to puniſh Vice. And whom muſt we thank then, that the Execution of theſe

Laws is ſo new a thing, but thoſe unfaithful Magiſtrates who have been ſo many Years entruſted with the Power of the Law againſt Prophaneneſs and Immorality, and have by Connivance infamouſly betrayed the Morals of the People they ought to have taken Care of? If there be any thing in the Objection, it lies at their Doors; We are not bound to be perjured and unfaithful, becauſe others have been ſo before us. The leſs Care has been taken hitherto, the more Diligence and Application will be requiſite now, to undo (if poſſible) all the Miſchief that was done by the irreligious Lenity of our Predeceſſors.

Obj. XXV. Eug. It will put a whole Neighbourhood into alarm, and breed a general Diſturbance, where all was at Quiet before.

Th. You mean, I ſuppoſe, that all who love their Vices will be clamorous at parting with them; and who can wonder at that? The Powers of Hell, you need not queſtion, will be up in Arms, and raging mad at all Attempts to make Men wiſe and ſober. Your wicked Neighbourhood lies now, as it has many Years done, in a profound Security, dozing on in Sin, without the Uneaſineſs of any preſent Puniſhment, or the Dread of any Puniſhment to come, and will continue ſo perhaps till they die away into Damnation, except you give them this charitable Diſturbance in due time. Is it not a falſe and pernicious Kindneſs, to be afraid of waking a Man, leſt you ſhould ſpoil a pleaſant Dream, when a Fire is breaking out in his Houſe, the Smoak ready to ſtifle him, and the next Chamber all in Flames? However your Proceedings may for the preſent interrupt the outward Peace they ſeem to enjoy, yet 'tis a fatal Peace, and you do well to break it: Believe me, Eugenius, this will be the trueſt Mark of your Affection to them, and tend to introduce amongſt them the only ſolid Serenity of a reform'd Life and a good Conſcience: For there is no Peace, ſaith my God, to the Wicked. Iſa. 57. 21. ——48. 22.

Eug. To puniſh all that offend would be ſevere; and to let ſome eſcape would be partial. Obj. XXVI.

Th. I deny both. To puniſh all that offend, would not be ſevere; becauſe the Penalties in all theſe Caſes are ſo very ſmall. Indeed if the Fine, inſtead of Twelve Pence, was Twenty Shillings for every Oath; inſtead of a Crown, Five Pounds for every drunken Debauch; and ſo proportionably in the reſt, there might be ſomething of Severity in taking all Advantages to convict: But as the Law now ſtands, I think 'tis, of its ſelf, by much too favourable in taxing Vice; and therefore the utmoſt Rigour of Execution can be no great Hardſhip. But ſuppoſe the good Nature of an Engliſhman incline you to be ſtill more favourable than the Law, and not to puniſh all Offenders; neither would this be, as you call it, Partiality. Becauſe ſome offend by meer Accident, contrary to their general Deportment and Character, thro' a particular Surpriſe, and ſuch are always pitiable; when a cuſtomary Debauchee, who ſins from a Habit and Delight in Sin, ſhould be made a public Example in his Puniſhment, as he is in his Vices. Nor are you perhaps ſtrictly bound to take Notice of every Offence in any kind, even of a notorious Offender, provided you puniſh him often enough to make him him know and practiſe his Duty better, if not wholly to abandon his Sin; and to make the Neighbourhood ſenſible, that all Vice muſt expect to lead an uneaſie Life within your Juriſdiction. If indeed you wink at ſome notorious Offenders, and (either thro' Fear or Favour) do not puniſh them at all, falling only upon ſuch as you think you can moſt ſafely be free with, this, to be ſure, is direct Partiality.

Eug. The Raſhneſs and Imprudence of ſome who have put theſe Laws in Execution, or contributed to it by informing, have brought upon all ſuch Attempts the Scandal of intemperate Zeal. Obj. XXVII.

Th. Some People have got the way of calling every thing intemperate that is above their own Meaſure; eſpecially if it be a Religious Affection, in which of all things they are moſt afraid of exceeding. And in Truth, with Men of little or but moderate Piety, i. e. with moſt of the World, the very mention of Zeal gives them the Spleen; they take it as another Word for Enthuſiaſm, and (as the famous Laureat of Vice has call'd it) a pious Madneſs of the Dryden.

Mind. It muſt be own'd, ſuch an Offence has been given, when it was made (thro' want of Judgment in ſome, thro' want of Honeſty in others) a Cloak for very ill Purpoſes, and wo to thoſe by whom the Offence cometh. But of it ſelf it is an * excellent Virtue; when it becomes irregular and ungovernable, 'tis a Fault. Now to define it rightly, ZEAL is a judicious Earneſtneſs of Deſire in a good Man to promote the Glory of God, proceeding from the juſt Affection he bears to Him. To this is certainly reducible the Pains he takes to ſuppreſs Prophaneneſs and Debauchery, which are moſt unſufferable Affronts to God, and Scandals to our holy Religion. Had thoſe amongſt us who think otherwiſe, lived in the Time of Phineas, what a Cry would they have made againſt him in the Caſe of Zimri and Cosbi, which look'd indeed ſomewhat more like intemperate Zeal, than any thing which our Societies have done in their Proceedings of Reformation! And yet God approved very highly of what he did, and it was accounted to him for Righteouſneſs. On the other hand, Zeal then becomes imprudent, intemperate and

and faulty, when it either ſpends it ſelf in Controverſie, rather than in the ſubſtantial Parts of Religion, the Study of good Works; when it is partial, in falling upon ſome Sins, and favouring others; when it ſuffers the Man himſelf to practiſe the ſame Vices (or as ill) as he arraigns in his Neighbour; when it is carried on with Paſſion, and intermixt with Malice; when any ſecular Intereſt is at the Bottom; when it does not diſcreetly conſider the propereſt Means and the moſt likely to be effectual to the Reformation it propoſes; and when it runs beyond the Authority of God's Word, and the Extent of Humane Laws, by which it is to act, and to be governed. Now ſuppoſing that ſome Imprudences ſhould have blemiſh'd the fair Appearances of Zeal which ſome have given in this excellent Work: This ſurely is not ſufficient to give good Men a Prejudice againſt theſe Attempts; for 'tis not poſſible, but that in all Undertakings that require the Aſſiſtance of many Hands, (as this does,) part of the Management muſt fall upon ſome that have not ſo good Parts, or ſo much Diſcretion as others; and part of it muſt fall upon Perſons of an inferior Rank, who (in this Caſe) tho' they may be Good Men, may reaſonably be ſuppoſed to know more of the Laws of God than of the State, and therefore may be liable to overſhoot themſelves in ſome Particulars, for which they are in all Reaſon and Conſcience to be excuſed upon their general good Deſign, and not to be cenſured for their want of Skill to manage it. Yet I will venture to challenge the World to inſtance in any popular Undertaking of great Concern and Difficulty, as this is, that was ever carried on with fewer Irregularities, with leſs imprudent Heat, leſs Mixture of Paſſion and Self-intereſt, or more exactly according to Law in the general, than this of the Execution of the Penal Statutes againſt Immorality has been. And tho' I ſhould grant you the matter of Fact in your Objection, that ſeveral Imprudences have been; yet the ill Management of particular Perſons can only reflect upon themſelves, the Deſign may nevertheleſs be very good. To argue from Particulars to Generals, has ever been accounted falſe Reaſoning;

Mat. 23. 23. Tit. 2. 14. Matt. 7. 14.

ing: Becauſe ſome are indiſcreet, therefore all are ſo; becauſe ſome conceal their Intereſt and their Paſſions under the Covert of Religious Zeal, therefore all Religion is nothing but Paſſion and Intereſt; this is wild Logick. And further, as to the Raſhneſs and Imprudence you charge them with, I hope a falſe Step in the Cauſe of Virtue, is not ſo great a Crime as Vice: And therefore except we will openly declare for Prophaneneſs and Impiety, we ought certainly much rather to join with even an imprudent good Man (ſo far as is according to Law) in proſecuting Wickedneſs, than to join with the vicious Party in railing at his Imprudence.

Eug. I have heard an Objection (true or falſe) againſt ſome in the Societies at London, that they make Money of Public-Houſes, by conniving at Diſorders there; and that Informers make a Trade of it, by being rewarded for their Informations, if not directly hired to inform. Obj. XXVIII.

Th. This is indeed a hard Charge, if it be true: But let your Authors prove their Allegation; let them prove that any one or more, who are actually Members of any of the Societies for for Reformation in London, are guilty of ſuch Connivances for Money, as they pretend; for Suggeſtion and Suſpicion are not enough. If ſuch Proof could have been made, you need not queſtion but ill Men would long ſince have made a Flouriſh with it. The Societies have now (I think) been upwards of Seventeen Years erected; and if in all this time any ſuch thing could have been proved againſt them, it would certainly have turned the Government from favouring them any longer, and would moſt effectually and quickly have overthrown the Reputation of their Deſign, and the Succeſs of their Endeavours. Their Annual printed Liſts of the many Thouſands of diſorderly Perſons and Houſes they have brought to Conviction and Puniſhment by Law, are Arguments not to be conteſted, that they make no Advantage by concealing and protecting them: For if otherwiſe, how come all theſe to be convict and puniſhed, when a ſmaller Sum of Money would have bought them off. And therefore I ſay again, let any Man (who pretends to have given Money to ſave himſelf or his Houſe on theſe Oc-Occaſions,) make Oath againſt any particular Perſon, whom he can prove to have received ſuch a Fee; and let the next Enquiry be, whether that Man either is now, or at the time of the Fact laid againſt him, was a Member of any of the Religious Societies; or if he was, then whether his Practice was known to the Reſt of the Society, and he continued ſtill a Member of that Body. As for being hired to inform, or rewarded for it, the Caſe is the ſame; let thoſe that accuſe them prove it. In the mean time let me turn you to a Page in the large Account of the Societies, (printed firſt in 1699; and the fifth Edition * of it the laſt Year 1706)--- "The World may be chal- * Page 11.

But ſuppoſe they really had taken Rewards for bringing in ill People to be puniſhed, why ſhould this be more ſcandalous than to claim and accept the Reward of Forty Pounds, allowed * for bringing in a High-way-Man and convicting him? If there be any Harm in the Thing, it lies in a Man's taking Money for bringing others to ſuffer the Penalties of the Law, and that is equally the State of both Caſes: Except the latter be leſs ſcandalous, becauſe more Money is to be got by it. Give me leave to read to you a few Lines more for the juſt and general Reputation of the Societies, out of the Account of the Progreſs of the Reformation of Manners, the laſt Edition, 1706. ties, that they may truly affirm, (as St. Paul does of his own Integrity,)
they Seek not their own Profit, but the Profit of many that they may be ſaved. 1 Cor. 10. 33.
And I hope, my dear Eugenius, you are of that Opinion too, however you propoſe for Satisfaction ſake the Objections you hear made by others.
Come, Friend, what ſay you? Are you willing to fall in with the like good Meaſures in the Country? And to uſe the Power which God has given

ven you in a reſolute Suppreſſing by Law the Vices and Immoralities of your Neighbourhood?

Eug. You put the Queſtion home, Theotimus; but I don't know whether it be yet fully ripe for an Anſwer. I muſt conſider a little more the Prejudices People have imbibed againſt theſe Proceedings, and the Hazards I ſhall run by ſtriking into them.

Th. You do well to count your Coſt; but I hope you ſtill keep a Reſerve for the Fear of God, and a good Conſcience.

Obj. XXIX. Eug. I ſhall certainly be call'd a Fanatic and a Presbyterian for my Pains, which will be no ſmall Prejudice againſt what I do.

Th. It is the moſt difficult thing in the World, to conceive how the Suppreſſing Vice and Immorality can be a Deſign againſt the eſtabliſh'd Church. Whoever charges you at that rate is guilty of the greateſt Impertinence, and of ſomething worſe; he throws the moſt infamous Scandal upon the Church of England, and ſerves the diſſenting Intereſt againſt it more effectually than any other Way. For if the Reflection be true, we muſt ſuppoſe

our Church to favour all thoſe wretched Vices which the Chriſtian Religion abſolutely condemns, and which (according to ſuch an Hypotheſis) None but the Diſſenters, or thoſe that incline to them, are againſt; and this, in other Words, is to allow, that None but theirs is a truly Chriſtian Eſtabliſhment. If a Poſition of this kind ſhould be generally received, would it not make all good Men, that have a ſincere Regard to Chriſt and his Religion, run into that Party, and forſake the Church of England? But, God be thanked, 'tis falſe. Our Church in her Liturgy, her Articles, her Canons and Homilies; our Clergy in their Sermons and Writings, and I would hope the greateſt Part of them in their Lives too, diſcountenance and diſclaim the Vices which we puniſh. And fully to ſatisfie the World that the Church of England, as ſuch, does patronize and encourage the Magiſtrate in thus puniſhing Immoralities, and that it is her Judgment, we are obliged by our Office ſo to do, let them turn to the Prayer for the Church militant in the Communion-Service (the moſt ſolemn time ſhe could could take to put us in Mind of our Duty) in which we are taught to pray, that ALL who are PUT IN AUTHORITY under our Sovereign may truly and indifferently miniſter Juſtice to the PUNISHMENT OF WICKEDNESS and VICE, and to the Maintenance of God's true Religion and VIRTUE. And this Clauſe was in, in the two Common-Prayer-Books of King Edward VI. before the Diſſenters were thought of. As for the popular Cry of Fanaticiſm and Presbyterianiſm, for doing what you ſee our Church prays God you may do, you will be wiſer, I hope, than to lay it much to Heart; you know your ſelf, and all your Friends know you, to be a conſtant Communicant with the Church of England, and I will add, an Honour to it by your good and virtuous Life, while your Objectors are a Scandal to it by a prophane and vicious one. You muſt expect the Malice of ill Men will be ſevere enough upon you with ill Names; but you are a Diſciple of the bleſſed Jeſus, and cannot expect better uſage than your great Maſter had. Remember how his Character was hand-handled by the Wicked of that Age, for the Reformation He attempted. It was propheſied of him by Malachi, that He ſhould be like a Refiner's Fire, and like Fuller's Soap; that he ſhould ſit as a Refiner and Purifier of Silver, and ſhould purifie the Sons of Levi, and purge them as Gold and Silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an Offering in Righteouſneſs. Accordingly one of the firſt Things he did in his public Miniſtry was, to purge the Temple of the prophane Market they kept in the outer Court of it. This Reformation Spirit raiſed a mighty Alarm in thoſe who were like to loſe by it. It was an Offence they would never forgive him, as it was the firſt Thing that rais'd their Spleen againſt him, which was afterwards encreaſed by his holy Doctrine and ſevere Reproofs. They rail'd at him on all Occaſions, call'd him a Samaritan, which in their way of ſpeaking was but another Word for Schiſmatic; they look'd upon him as a Madman, and one poſſeſſed with the Devil, which anſwers to the true Import of the Word Fanatic: But let their Malice rage againſt you thus, as furiouſly as it will, you ſuffer for the ſame good Cauſe the bleſſed Jeſus did, and ſhall unqueſtionably find a Reward in Heaven, that will outballance all; for 1 Pet. 2. 19. this is thank-worthy, if a Man, for Conſcience towards God, endure Grief, ſuffering wrongfully.

Matt. 10. 24, 25

Eug. I muſt ask you leave, Theotimus, to put this Objection a little further, before I have done with it. The Reformation Societies at London have ſo many Diſſenters in them, who being ſo freely received, and even careſſed by them, I muſt needs ſay it looks like what I have heard it call'd, a factious Deſign againſt the Church, and ſeems a little to juſtifie (at leaſt to be ſome Excuſe for) thoſe that take a Reformer and a Diſſenter to be the ſame thing. Beſide, that this Method of Proceeding was ſtarted in the late Reign, when the Diſſenters were too much favoured.

Th. The End of forming Societies for any thing, is to carry it on the more ſucceſsfully with united Heads, and Hands, and Purſes, as a common Intereſt: So Companies in Trade are form'd, and the Advantage is viſible. Now if you would know, why Diſſenters are ſo freely admitted into the Societies for Reformation: I ask, why they are not as well to be excluded from the Societies for Trade? The Buſineſs which they join in proſecuting, and upon which they meet, in either Societies, is nothing at all to the Diſſenters Purpoſe, as Diſſenters; nor affects the Church of England at all, as a particular Conſtitution. What has the Puniſhment of a Swearer or a Drunkard to do with the Presbyterian Scheme and the Abolition of Epiſcopacy? No more than a Cabal upon the Rates of Merchandice. If you ſtill ask, how the Diſſenters (if they had not ſome ſecret End to drive at) come to unite ſo readily with us in theſe Attempts? I anſwer, becauſe Prophaneneſs and Impiety are Enemies in common both to them and us, as they are in general to the Chriſtian Religion, which we both profeſs: And Vice had gained too much Head not to require all the Aſſiſtance we could have to check it; and that Aſſiſtance which good Men amongſt the Diſſenters have given in this common Work, we thankfully acknowledge, and pray God to reward

it. But let it be remembred, that tho' they did and do come in to our Aſſiſtance (as every good Chriſtian will, when the Intereſt and Honour of all Religion is concern'd,) yet they were not the firſt Spring of our Societies; thoſe who began them were Gentlemen of the Church of England, with whom, as their Number encreaſed, and their Proceedings were known, the Diſſenters willingly embarqued. If you ſuſpect the latter of a Deſign, which the Church-Men they join with are not aware of; you ſtart a meer Suſpicion, without any Proof or any probable Grounds for an Argument: And in the next Place, you make your ſelf wiſer and more apprehenſive than all thoſe Church-Men, Clergy as well as others, who are Members with them of the ſame Societies. Theſe Men can ſee no dangerous Plots againſt the Church that can lurk under what the Diſſenters do againſt Impiety and Vice; and they, methinks, ſhould at leaſt be as well qualified and as much intereſted, to ſpy out any ſuch ſecret Deſigns, as you and I in the Country. If you go further, and ſuppoſe even they themſelves ſelves are in the Plot to ruine their own Church, in concert with the Diſſenters; I ſay, 'tis a hard Suppoſition that ſo many of our Biſhops and Divines, of the greateſt Character in England, as are actually engaged in theſe Societies, (and ſome of them, of thoſe who wrote ſo ſolidly and learnedly againſt the Diſſenters, in the Collection called the London Caſes) ſhould now be ſuſpected of a Deſign to ruine the Church they were always ready to defend before. 'Tis hard, I ſay, to imagine, that my Lords the Biſhops, and the reſt of the Clergy, who (if there were no other Argument to clear them upon) enjoy too much in our Church to be willing to loſe, ſhould intend to deſtroy the Eſtabliſhment by which they live. As to the Riſe of theſe Societies in King William and Queen Mary's time, when you ſay the Diſſenters were too much favoured, 'tis no Argument at all, except you can otherwiſe prove, that they contribute to the Intereſt of the Diſſenters againſt the Church.

Eug. No; you have pretty well ſatisfied me of that. But whatever the Clergy about London do in this Obj. XXX.

Matter, I believe you find few in the Country here, that care to appear in Favour of ſuch a Deſign; and that, I muſt tell you, will give a mighty Damp to what we can do; for ſay the People, if this were a Deſign of Importance to Religion, why do not our Clergy ſhow us that it is ſo by their Concurrence?

Th. And ſo the beſt of them every where will do: Or if they don't, the more's the Pity: But are we to neglect our Duty, becauſe ſome of them forget theirs? Not at all; we muſt anſwer to God for the Duty of Magiſtrates, let them acquit themſelves as they can for that of Miniſters. If neither the Example of ſo many Fathers of the Church, the Right Reverend the Biſhops, and of ſo many other famous and learned Divines amongſt us, as have concerned themſelves in the Deſign of ſuppreſſing Vice by Law, and recommended it from the Pulpit in the many Sermons they have preached before the Societies, and printed; if the Circular Letters of the moſt Reverend the Arch-Biſhop of Canterbury, which do the ſame in particular to the Clergy of his Province;

vince; if above all, the Fear of God and the Obligations of their ſacred Function, will not prevail with them to be active in what ſo directly and immediately tends to the very Buſineſs of their Pulpit and their Calling; what ſhall we ſay, but that our Saviour's Prophecy is made good, Because Iniquity ſhall abound, the Love of many ſhall wax cold? They will ſome time have a very terrible Account to give, when our Lord ſhall examine them of the Opportunities they had of doing Good. It's true, there are ſome Parts of this Work which in Prudence they may forbear, and others which by Law they cannot meddle with: Yet they may contribute to it in their Sermons, by exciting their Pariſhioners to inform of Offences to the Magiſtrate; they may in private Converſation approve, juſtifie, and recommend ſuch Methods; they may ſet up Societies in their Pariſhes, and meet with them, to concert Meaſures for the rendring ſo good a Deſign effectual, and to encourage to a vigorous Proſecution of it; themſelves may give an Example, by informing of ſome in their Pariſhes with Mat. 24. 12.

whom they find their public and private Admonitions do no Good: In ſhort, they may many ways countenance and encourage the Suppreſſion of Vice by legal Puniſhments if they pleaſe; and the Royal Proclamation has given them four times in a Year not only an Opportunity, but a Command to do ſomething of this Nature, more particularly than at other times. If they will do nothing at all, at their Peril be it: But the Pariſh is not bound by the Example of their Miniſter againſt the general Obligation that lies upon them as Chriſtians, or the particular one upon any of them as Juſtices of the Peace.

Obj. XXXI. Eug. Some perhaps would be ready to ſay, 'tis only the Effect of a moroſe, cynical Temper, or attribute it to ill Breeding, and want of knowing the World.

Th. The vain and vicious Part of Mankind will never want hard Words to give to a ſerious Senſe of Religion and our Duty: But the time will come, when thoſe airy Gentlemen (except they prevent it by a ſeaſonable Repentance) ſhall loſe all the Mirth and Levity of Sin in an eternal Melancholy. Perhaps they will charge you, as you ſay, with Soureneſs of Temper and ill Breeding, for giving them Diſturbance in their Vices; but as they give the ſame ill Language to Religion its ſelf in the general, 'tis in Effect no more than charging it upon Religion and the Fear of God, which every good Man will be well enough pleaſed to ſtand or fall by. However, ſhow them by an innocent Cheerfulneſs in Converſation, that it can be nothing of Melancholy or Moroſeneſs in you, and go on doing your Duty, unconcerned at any Character they may fix upon it; Knowing the World is but a plauſible Phraſe Men have got for imitating or bearing with all the Prophaneneſs and Impieties they ſee grown faſhionable abroad; and want of that, is ſtill no higher a Charge than want of Wickedneſs, which I ſuppoſe you will never reſent as a Reflection upon you. But let them ſee you know ſo much of the World, as neither to love nor fear it: And if every Magiſtrate would do his Duty, the vicious World would ſoon be made to know its ſelf a little better, in a ſeverer Sence. The

an

Charges

Charges of this kind which you mention, and many other Hardſhips and Difficulties in the Work, are owing to the long Neglect of Magiſtrates putting the Laws in Execution, which had made it an unuſual thing, or in other Words, what Gentlemen have not been bred up to the Notion and Experience of, and therefore they cry out againſt it as ill Breeding. Cuſtom on the other Side, makes every thing familiar; and why then may we not conclude, that by a general Practice of putting the Laws in Execution for ſome Years, it will be accounted conſiſtent enough with Civility (if not an eſtabliſh'd Article of good Manners) ſo to do? Things more unlikely have obtained by Uſe. To inſtance only in Swearing, Curſing, and prophane Diſcourſe, which in themſelves are the greateſt Rudeneſſes imaginable, (boiſterous and noiſie, an open Inſolence to the God we worſhip, and the utmoſt Affront to a Chriſtian Company, who are ſuppoſed to reverence him and his Religion, and to account him their beſt Friend,) yet theſe, by meer Dint of Faſhion have been, till of late, eſteem'd the very Teſt of a Gentleman.

But

But tho' the Doing of your Duty be contrary to the preſent Humour of the World, we muſt nevertheleſs go reſolutely on with it, as knowing that we are not to be judged for Eternity by the arbitrary Faſhions of Men, but by the ſteady Rule of Scripture, and the Sentence of him with whom there is no Variableneſs, nor Shadow of turning.

Eug. I am not popular, you know I make little Figure in the World; and methinks another ſort of People might undertake it with more Succeſs than I can hope to do. Obj. XXXII.

Th. Popularity is an Advantage in ſome Reſpects, to this Work, and a Diſadvantage in others. The Advantage of a popular Man is, that Attempts of ſuch a Nature gain more eaſily upon the good Will of the People by his Authority amongſt them, who are prepoſſeſſed with an Opinion, that he will do nothing to their Prejudice, nothing but what's for their Good. It ſpreads alſo much further, and other Magiſtrates in the Neighbourhood or the County will be readier to fall in with the ſame Deſign, when a Man of great Figure and and Reputation ſets it on Foot. Let all thoſe great Men, who have ſuch an Advantage above others of doing Good this way, conſider, how they will anſwer their Neglect when God ſhall call them to Account. But Popularity and the Enjoyment of humane Favour is alſo a dangerous Temptation to decline ſo ſevere a Duty, and ſo far 'tis a Diſadvantage. If, as you ſay, you are not popular, if you have but little Intereſt in the Reſpects and Affection of your Neighbourhood, conſider, that God is the greateſt and the beſt of Friends. And you have ſo much the more Reaſon to apply your ſelf to obtain his Favour and Bleſſing, which by this good Work you will be ſure to do, and make an infinitely wiſer Bargain, than to purchaſe Popularity with the Shipwrack of a good Conſcience. You are eaſed then of the unhappy Temptation of being afraid to diſoblige by puniſhing; for he that has nothing to loſe, can fear the Loſs of nothing: And this I aſſure you is a very great Advantage. If by Reaſon of your ſtudious retired Temper, or for any other innocent Cauſe, you are not entangled angled in particular Friendſhips with, Obligations to, or Dependances upon all Men; what worldly Conſideration ſhould make you Partial? You may with ſo much the more Readineſs and Courage make the greateſt vicious Gentleman in your Neighbourhood ſubmit to the Puniſhment of the Laws for his Extravagance. And I muſt tell you, that ſome few ſuch Examples made will be likely to ſtrike a more effectual Terror into Vice, than puniſhing an hundred meaner Perſons for the ſame Offence. Deſpair not of Succeſs; remember the Apoſtle's Obſervation, —— God hath choſen the weak things of the World to confound the Mighty, and things which are deſpiſed hath God choſen, and things which are not, to bring to nought things which are; that no Fleſh ſhould glory in his Preſence. Depend upon his Aſſiſtance and Power, and you will have odds abundantly of the moſt popular Mortal upon Earth. 1 Cor. 1. 27, 29.

Eug. It's a difficult thing however to puniſh a great Man. Your Men of Power and Figure will take it for an unpardonable Affront to have a Warrant againſt them for Swearing, Drunkenneſs, Obj. XXXIII.

kenneſs, Prophaneneſs, or any thing elſe.

Th. On the other Hand, it will be a dangerous Partiality that will exaſperate inferior People whom you puniſh, and go near to invalidate all your Endeavours of Reformation, if you let ſuch Men be openly vicious without Control. Be they as great as they will, they muſt not expect to be greater than the Laws; and you, as you are entruſted by the Government, muſt not ſuffer it. For beſide your Duty in puniſhing Vice, it may be of the laſt ill Conſequence both to the Crown and People, to let Men of Quality preſume of being above Subjection to the Laws; it may end in overturning the Throne for a tyrannical Ariſtocracy, and reducing the common People to Villinage and wooden Shoes. And therefore for your Prince and Country's Sake you ſhould fix a reſolute Purpoſe to curb the Vices of the greateſt, as well as thoſe of others. If they offend, convict them; if they refuſe to pay, diſtrain; if they commence a Suit againſt you, ſtand it, and truſt the Providence of God to determine on the Side of Juſtice and Re-

Religion: Thou ſhalt not reſpect the Perſon of the Poor, nor honour the Perſon of the Mighty, ſays God; but in Righteouſneſs ſhalt thou judge thy Neighbour. And in another Place, Ye ſhall not reſpect Perſons in Judgment, nor BE AFRAID OF THE FACE OF MAN, for the Judgment is God's. In like Manner Jehoſaphat charges his Judges — Take heed what ye do, for ye judge not for Man, but for the Lord, who is with you in the Judgment, and obſerves you; wherefore now let the Fear of the Lord be upon you, take heed and do it, for there is no Iniquity with the Lord our God, nor RESPECT OF PERSONS, nor taking of Gifts. Levit. 19. 15. Deut. 1. 17. 2 Chron. 19. 6, 7.

Eug. If I take your Advice, Theoti-mus, it will ſo alarm the Gentlemen about me, who either ſuffer, or may be in Danger ſo to do, that I foreſee very eaſily, my Commiſſion will not be long lived. Obj. XXXIV.

Th. Suppoſe it be not, your Country will loſe more by that than your ſelf. They will want your Aſſiſtance, and all good Men will be ſorry you're ſtruck out: But if you conſider your ſelf only, you will be eaſed of a great deal of Trouble and Expence, and may retire with ſo much the more Satisfaction, as you have the Honour to be ſtruck out for the doing of your Duty. 'Tis very probable indeed, nay 'tis almoſt certain, that your Enemies, in complaining of you, will not dare to plead upon the true and naked Merits of the Cauſe; for in this Reign a barefaced impeaching the Reformation of Manners will meet with no very kind Reception from Her Majeſty and Her Council. But they will make ſome falſe Miſrepreſentations of you to the Government; and if this be but likely to ſerve the Purpoſes of Vice, and turn you out, you will find a Set of Men who won't ſcruple it. I muſt tell you further, however, that tho' your Adverſaries ſhould go even this Way to work, they will find ſome Difficulty to ſucceed; the Government is not forward of making ſuch Alterations as they aim at by ſtriking out of Commiſſion (except for very good Reaſons well prov'd) whom it has once admitted in: And therefore it is more than poſſible they may loſe their Labour. In ſhort, 'tis my Opinion, that ſo long as you go on faithfully, ſerving to your Power the Honour of God and of your Prince, of Religion and good Government, by an active Zeal on all Occaſions againſt Impiety and Prophaneneſs, God will protect you, in whoſe Cauſe you are engaged; your Enemies are the Enemies of God, and neither their malicious Arts nor open Violence ſhall proſper.

Eug. If any of our Brethren of the Bench would begin this Matter, I would willingly join with them; but I don't love to be ſingular. Obj. XXXV.

Th. But remember, my Friend, that 'tis not humane Examples by which we muſt be judged. Singularity cannot in its ſelf be reproachful, but as it is with Reſpect to Good or Evil; and then 'tis not the Singularity, but the thing in which we are ſingular, that is to be conſidered. To be ſingular in Wickedneſs is a Crime, and ſo much the greater as it argues the Height of Impiety. To be ſingular in a good thing is a Virtue, and ſo much the more excellent, as it argues ſome great Proficiency and Perfection in Virtue, to which we dare adhere in ſpite of all the Diſcouragement of ill Examples about us. So that you have nothing to do in this Caſe, but to conſider whether it be a good Undertaking, and your Duty to ſuppreſs Vice, according to the Authority you have to do it. If it be, (as I hope has been fully proved before) 'tis a Virtue and an Honour to be ſingular in it. It's true, the wicked World will not be of that Opinion, but no wiſe and good Man will frame his Judgment in what concerns Religion by the Rule of theirs. They, to be ſure, will reproach you for having more Conſcience and Virtue than your Neighbours; but I hope you will have more Grace than to bluſh at ſuch Reproaches. I can't think Eugenius ſo weak as to be put out of Countenance in the Exerciſe of his lawful Authority by the impertinent Tattle of a Mob. However, (as you know your own Infirmities better than I do,) if this be really an Objection with you; call to Mind the Words of our Saviour --- Whoſoever ſhall be aſhamed of me and of my Words in this adulterous and ſinful Generation, of him alſo ſhall the Son of Man be aſhamed when he cometh in the Glory of his Father with the holy Angels.

Mark 8. 38.

And

And remember his Example too, in whoſe Perſon the Prophet thus delivers himſelf: --- The Lord God will help me, therefore I ſhall not be confounded; therefore have I ſet my Face as a Flint, and I know that I ſhall not be aſhamed.

Eug. But to be alone in ſo difficult a Work, is a Diſcouragement and Diſadvantage, as well as a Reproach. I ſhall have no Body to adviſe or aſſiſt me. Obj. XXXVI.

Th. If you want Aſſiſtance or Advice, ask it, in the firſt Place, of God, the Fountain of all Wiſdom and Power, and he himſelf has promiſed, that it ſhall be given you. I am continually with Thee, ſays the Pſalmiſt: Thou haſt holden me by thy right Hand; Thou ſhalt guide me with thy Counſel, and afterward receive me to Glory. And thus King Aſa in his Prayer acknowledges, that with God it is nothing to help, whether with many, or with them that have no Power. You will want indeed the Concurrence of thoſe that ſhould join with you, if they decline it; yet perhaps ſome of them, tho' they don't think fit to declare themſelves by acting openly in the Cauſe, will give you their Advice if you deſire it. Or James 1. 5. Pſal. 73. 23, 24. 2 Chron. 14. 11.

if they will not, you have other Friends to conſult upon any Difficulty, either by Converſation or Letters.

Eug. Yes, Theotimus, and I muſt take the Freedom to reckon you in the Number; but I ſhall fear to be troubleſome by applying my ſelf on all Occaſions that may require Advice.

Th. For my Part I aſſure you, it will be the greateſt Pleaſure in the World to me, to aſſiſt you in ſo good a Deſign; and ſo far as my poor Capacity will go, you may depend upon me; but for your Satisfaction and Security in what you do, it will be proper in ſome Caſes to adviſe with Lawyers.

CH. XXXVII. Eug. in the mean time, it will be accounted Pride and Forwardneſs in me to enter upon ſuch an Affair, when ſo many others (my elder Brethren on the Bench) don't care to concern themſelves.

Th. You are not to account to God for the Opinion the World is pleaſed to have of you, but how far you deſerve it. Forwardneſs even in a good thing, when it proceeds from Pride, is a Fault; when 'tis owing only to a

Love

Love of Virtue, and Deſire of doing Good, the Conſcience of this Principle ſhould make you deſpiſe the Cenſures of the World. Will the Fear of ſuch ill-natured Cenſures excuſe you before God for the Neglect of your Duty? Ought you not to obey him rather than Men? The Jewiſh Rulers, to be ſure, thought St. Peter and St. John a couple of forward Fellows for preaching up a Doctrine which they had not embraced nor authorized: And how did the Apoſtles behave themſelves upon this? They appealed openly to them in the Senſe of their Duty --- Whether it be right in the Sight of God, to hearken unto you more than unto God, judge ye: For we cannot but ſpeak the things which we have ſeen and heard. It's true, there is, in good Manners, a Reſpect owing to thoſe that were in Commiſſion before us; but we carry it too far, when it creates ſuch a ſervile Dependance; when it makes us afraid to uſe our Authority in any thing, which they will not encourage or approve, tho' we are ſure 'tis agreeable to Law, and ſenſible that 'tis Part of our Duty. Your Commiſſion, I'm ſure, lays no ſuch Reſtraint upon you; It runs, Quod aſſignavimus vos CONJUNCTIM & DIVISIM, & QUEMLIBET VESTRUM. The Statutes are the Rule it ſets you, the Execution of them is the immediate Buſineſs of your Place: And if others, who are obliged by the ſame Statutes, the ſame Commiſſion, and the ſame Oath, will not think fit to act ſo far as they ought to do in theſe Matters, or not to act at all in them, ſtill you remain obliged nevertheleſs to the full Execution of your Office. It ſeems ſtrange, that Men of Senſe and Integrity ſhould not all have the ſame Apprehenſion of their Duty in ſo plain a Caſe. I can account for it no other way in Charity, than that thoſe that can think otherwiſe, and have any ſerious Regard to their Duty, have either not read the Statutes and the Proclamation, or never given themſelves the Trouble to conſider them, as they ought to do; and have imbibed ſuch popular Prejudices againſt this Reformation-Work, that they will not ſo much as look into (or however, not carefully read through) the Books that have been writ writ to prove and to inculcate their Duty in this Matter; and that if they would do theſe things, if they would take the Pains to examine the Arguments that have been urged for ſuch an Obligation upon them, they would be of another Mind, and heartily join their Endeavours with you. In the mean time, I own 'tis very poſſible the Pride of ſome will make them think themſelves ſlighted, by your acting in ſuch a Work without a Precedent from them; and they will malign and ridicule you for it, for pretending to more Religion than their eaſie Conſciences ſuppoſe to be neceſſary: But I'm ſure it would be more ridiculous if you ſhould cut your Conſcience to their Meaſure, and forget the Commands of the Government which you are to act by, and the Laws of God which you are to be judged by. The Proud, ſays David, have had me greatly in Deriſion, yet have I not declined from thy Law. If Example weighs ſo much with you, conſider this; and proceed boldly in doing what lies in your Power to ſuppreſs all Wickedneſs, whether thoſe that have been longer in Commiſſion will join with you or not, ſo long as you have the Laws to warrant you, and your Oath to bind you. 'Tis a proper Civility indeed to ask them firſt the Queſtion, whether they will pleaſe to ſtrike in with the Deſign, and let them know you ſhall be glad of their Direction and Aſſiſtance in it: If they refuſe to meddle, you have however made your Compliment, and have no more to do than to proceed in your Duty.

Object. XXXVIII. Eug. I think one Man can't do much.

Th. That's a Miſtake: Almoſt the whole Buſineſs of ſuppreſſing Prophaneneſs and Impiety, may be done by One Juſtice of Peace, by the Power which the ſeveral Statutes in thoſe Caſes have given him: He may levy Twelve Pence each Sunday (a) upon thoſe that abſent from Church; he may levy the ſeveral Penalties upon Prophanation of the Lord's-Day, (b) by Sports and Paſtimes, by (c) Carriers, Waggoners, Drovers, &c. travelling, or Butchers killing or ſelling Meat upon that Day, by (d) expoſing Goods to Sale, or exerciſing Trades upon it, and the like; and he may puniſh (e) Drunkenneſs, (f) Tipling, (g) Prophane Swearing and Curſing, without a Neceſſity ceſſity of any other Magiſtrate's Concurrence: Our prudent Legiſlators foreſeeing how hardly the greateſt Part of our Magiſtrates would be got to execute ſuch Laws, have left it in the Power of any one Juſtice of Peace, that has a Senſe of Religion and his Duty, to act in theſe things, that he might not be wind-bound by the vicious Negligence of his Brethren, Eug. You do well to put me in Mind of this, but it was not what I intended by the Objection. My Meaning was, That when a ſingle Perſon enters upon ſuch an Undertaking, it can be effectual only in the Neighbourhood juſt about him, or in his own Preſence; and thoſe in the ſame Authority with himſelf, if they refuſe to take the ſame Meaſures, not only limit the Reformation to a ſmall Diſtrict, but encourage the Impudence of Vice, even there, and render it ſo much the more difficult to be ſuppreſſed.

Th. You may puniſh upon Information in any Part of your County, if thoſe that ſhould do it will not; and let it be known, that you will do ſo, to encourage thoſe that have a ſin-

ſincere Zeal for Religion to bring Informations to you. You don't know how much this may contribute, if vigorouſly applied to, to the Reformation of a larger Diſtrict than your own Neighbourhood. But however that be, you muſt rather do what Good you can, (be it more or leſs) than ſit ſtill and do none at all. If by puniſhing Vice, any one little Village, nay, any one Family in it, be effectually civilized, 'tis worth all the Pains you can take, as it may end in a thorough Eſtabliſhment of Religion amongſt them, and that in the Salvation of their Souls?

Obj. XXXIX. Eug. This is all very true: But what if other Juſtices, inſtead of joining with me, ſhould oppoſe me.

Th. Let them conſider the Woe pronounced by our Saviour againſt Luke 11. 52. thoſe in his time, that entred not in themſelves to the Kingdom of God, and hindred others that were about it. It is the utmoſt Pitch of Malignity againſt God and Virtue, when one in Authority, who ſhould promote the Honour of them both, thus openly declares for Vice and Damnation. Keep you within the Directions given ven you by the Laws, and the Malice of ſuch Men will have no worſe Effect than to expoſe themſelves: For they cannot hinder you from puniſhing. They may indeed give Spirit to Wickedneſs for the preſent; but that will ſoon fail, when ill Men, who are buoy'd up againſt you by ſuch Oppoſition, find all that your powerful Enemies threatned ending in nothing but ill Language and perſonal Spleen, without being able either to affright you from going on, or any other way compel you to deſiſt. You muſt however ſummon all your Reſolution to carry you thro' ſuch an unhappy Diſcouragement as this will be; and eſpecially conſider him who endured ſuch Contradiction of Sinners againſt himſelf, leſt you be wearied and faint in your Mind. You can never be oppoſed with more Virulence and Malice than Chriſt was by the Jewiſh Rulers; the Men in Authority ſet themſelves againſt him from the very firſt; yet he went on with his good Work as long as he lived, and ſealed and finiſh'd it with his Blood. Hear the Command and Promiſe of God to the Prophet Jeremy, in Fear of the like Oppoſition from the Princes and great Men of Judah;

Jer. 1. 8, 19. Be not afraid of their Faces: for I am with thee to deliver thee. And they ſhall fight againſt thee, but they ſhall not prevail; for I am with thee, ſaith the Lord, to deliver thee. Now if the Protection of God be not a Guard ſufficient againſt the Oppoſition of Men, then I ſubmit.

Eng. I muſt improve this Objection in another, and that I aſſure you Object. XL. a very material one. If other Juſtices either openly or underhand abet People in oppoſing this Work, either I or the Conſtables may be drawn into expenſive Suits at Law, whenever an obſtinate Offender will bring his Action for the Diſtreſs.

Th. If there be no Defect in your Information, and no Irregularity in your Warrant, or in the Execution of it, there is not room for any Action to be brought. This indeed muſt be your's and the Conſtable's Care, to ſee that there be no Miſtake or Miſmanagement which may be laid hold on to give you Trouble, but that the whole Proceeding of you both keep cloſe to the Direction of the the Statute; and if any Body will then be ſo Fool-hardy to enter an Action againſt you, he will ſoon learn, by dear Experience, how little is to be got by it. You may depend upon this, that all Magiſtrates and Officers of Juſtice, diſturbed for doing any thing relating to their Office, will be ſure to find the utmoſt Favour from a Court of Juſtice that can conſiſt with Law. If you pleaſe to caſt your Eye upon the Statute 7 Jac. 1. c. 5. you will find what public Proviſion is already made in ſuch Caſes: It allows a Juſtice of Peace, Mayor, Conſtable, &c. if any Action be brought againſt them for any thing done by Virtue of their Office, to plead the general Iſſue, [not guilty] and give the ſpecial Matter in Evidence: And if a Verdict paſs for the Defendant, or if the Plaintiff become Nonſuit or diſcontinue, the Defendant ſhall recover double Coſts of Suit. And by the late Act againſt prophane Swearing and Curſing, if they be ſued for executing that Statute, they ſhall have treble Coſts. Now, my Friend, if you or your Conſtable be ſued, your Adverſary runs at leaſt

twice the Hazard that you do. You, if you recover, have double Coſts againſt him: He, if he ſucceed never ſo well with his Action, can pretend to no more than common Coſts. You are ſure of all the Favour, he of all the Diſcountenance that can be by Law, from the Court. So that you ſee what odds you have againſt him to encourage you. It is my Opinion further, that if one Suit be commenced upon ſuch an Account, and your Adverſary be caſt, it will put an End to all the Oppoſition of this kind you are afraid of; no Body elſe will dare to give you a ſecond Trouble. The Expence at Law therefore will be no great Matter: But if it were more, if you were to run out your whole Eſtate in Suits to defend your Execution of theſe good Laws, could you part with it upon better Terms? Is not the Favour of God and the Happineſs of eternal Life worth infinitely more than this? Are you any more than a Steward in your Eſtate for God? And do you grudge to diſburſe his Money to maintain his own Cauſe?

Eug. There is a great deal in what you ſay, Theotimus; but has not your Zeal Zeal carried you ſomewhat too far in the Particulars? You know the Apoſtle requires us to provide for our own Families, and calls him worſe than an Infidel that does not.

Th. I put the Caſe to the utmoſt, only to ſtrengthen my Argument. 'Tis next to impoſſible you ſhould be ſo harraſſed with vexatious Suits, as literally to conſume your whole Eſtate againſt them. Perhaps they may bring a Charge of Forty or Fifty Pounds upon you; and how much will that reduce your way of Living, or impair the Fortunes of your Children? Only I add, that if God ſhould think fit (by ſuffering the Impudence and Malice of ill Men) to try you, with the Hazard or Loſs of all you have, it would be well diſpoſed of, and what your Duty requires you to forego, when the Honour of God and Religion makes it neceſſary. Whoſoever he be that forſaketh not all that he hath cannot be my Diſciple, ſays Chriſt. Luke 14.33.

Eug. But all Men are not in the ſame Circumſtances. Some have good Eſtates, and little to do with them: Others a much ſmaller Fortune, a nu-numerous Family of Children, and many poor Relations; won't you allow ſuch as theſe to be a little more cautious what Expence they run into than the other?

Th. I allow them both to avoid (as much as poſſible) the giving an obſtinate and purſe-proud Sinner any real Advantage to ground an Action upon. Let them keep from Suits as prudently as they can, provided they don't compound with their Conſciences for the Sake of their Purſes, but continue ſtill to execute their Office and the Laws with full Vigour, as they ought to do. Whatever a Man's domeſtic Circumſtances are, he muſt not ſhorten his Duty for Fear of Trouble and Expence. If his Eſtate be ſmall, he ſhows ſo much the more of a generous Faith in the Divine Providence, who dares truſt his Family to the Care and Goodneſs of God, by whoſe Command and for whoſe Glory he is obliged to diſpoſe otherwiſe of that which ſhould maintain it: And I doubt not, as the Faith is more generous, the Reward will be proportionable.

Eug. A Gentleman, who has an Annual Revenue certain from his Land, tho' it be not ſo great as ſome of his Neighbours, has more Encouragement to venture upon Expence in ſuch a Cauſe, than one that has nothing but his Trade, tho' a very good one, to depend upon, which ebbs and flows by ſeveral Accidents, and by the Favour or Diſfavour of his Neighbourhood. Now the Magiſtrates of our Corporations are uſual Men of Trade, and may ſuffer very much in their Buſineſs, diſobliging their Cuſtomers by whom they live, and impairing the original Fund out of which they ſhould provide for their Children. Their Trade will be leſſened for the future by the Malice which ill Men will bear them, over and above the preſent Charges of Suit out of what they had laid up before. And this Objection holds yet ſtronger on the Side of the Conſtables, who are ſtill ſuppoſed to be of more ordinary Rank, ſtill more dependant on the Good-Will of their Neighbourhood, and, as they have leſs to live upon, more eaſily undone. Obj. XLI.

Th. It may be ſo, if we judge by the natural Tendency of things: But in Caſes of this Nature, where the Duty we owe to God, and our Obligation to promote his Honour, are concerned, we muſt ſtill inſiſt upon Arguments of Religion for a Balance. Our too great Eagerneſs for the World is, in more Inſtances than one, a very fatal Temptation to neglect our Duty. No Man can ſerve two Maſters, — he will hold to the one, and deſpiſe the other; ye cannot ſerve God and Mammon. And as it is our Duty, to take off our Affections from this to the other World, ſo it is our Intereſt to lay up our Treaſures there, where they can never be impaired by the Villany and Malice of ill Men. Therefore our Saviour commands us to depend upon the Providence of God, and his Bleſſing, for all the Neceſſaries of humane Life. He inſtances in the Fowls of the Air, and Flowers of the Field; which, tho' they have no Subſiſtance beyond this periſhing Life, and no Means of providing for that by their own Labour, God takes Care of, and ſupports, and adorns; and how much more will he think himhimſelf concerned to take Care of Men, whom he has enobled with immortal Souls? Will he not ſtill more particularly, do you think, provide for ſuch of them as have either actually loſt, or are reſolutely bent to venture all the Means of Subſiſtance they enjoyed from him to promote his Glory? Does not the Suppoſition of a moſt juſt and merciful Being, (which we own by the Name of God) very naturally lead us to ſuch an Expectation?

Eug. Theſe are Speculations that may entertain a philoſophical Mind well enough, in the midſt of Eaſe and Plenty: But is it practicable, think you, for Men, who have always converſed rather with Buſineſs than with Books, to ſupport themſelves with ſuch Reflexions when they find a viſible Decay of their Trade on this Account?

Th. How little ſoever they converſe with other Books, I am ſure they are bound as Chriſtians to be converſant with the ſacred Scriptures; and there they will find theſe Notions not ariſing from the vain Philoſophy of Men, but from the Truth and

Promiſe of the Eternal God, by their Belief or Disbelief of which they ſhall be judged at the laſt Day. For after our Saviour had been adviſing at large to this Dependance upon God for the Neceſſaries of Life, he adds, Seek ye firſt the Kingdom of God and his Righteouſneſs, (that Righteouſneſs which will render you acceptable in his Sight) and all theſe things (ſo far as they are needful) ſhall be added unto you. If they won't believe God Himſelf, I don't expect they ſhould believe me. You ask, if I think it practicable to ſupport one's ſelf under the Senſe of Want and Poverty, by truſting to the Providence of God. I do; and that becauſe God has not commanded us any thing that is impracticable; the good Spirit of Grace aſſiſting us; as it muſt in all our other Virtues. I have learned in whatſoever State I am, ſays St. Paul, therewith to be content. Every where and in all things I am inſtructed, both to be full and to be hungry, to abound and to ſuffer need: I can do all things through Chriſt that ſtrengtheneth me. We have had not only ancient, but modern Inſtances of ſuch a generous and and truly Chriſtian Faith. Men, who, in our own times, have vigorouſly purſued the Work of Reformation, in ſeveral Capacities, and been at much Expence, and run all Hazards, and ſuffered a viſible Decay in their Trade, proceeding purely from their Zeal in this Undertaking, and yet have gone on reſolutely in their Duty, being willing to ſuffer the Loſs of all things in promoting the Glory of God, in Hopes of that eternal Life which God, that cannot lie, has promiſed them.

Tit. 1. 2.

Eug. Notwithſtanding all that can be ſaid, this Objection will not be eaſily abated you; it has taken deep Root in Men that are concerned for their ſecular Intereſts.

Th. It has ſo. But ſuch a Love of the World as hinders us in any kind from doing our Duty, is unqueſtionably one of thoſe Spiritual Enemies we renounced in our Chriſtian Baptiſm. Love not the World, ſays St. John, nor the things of the World: If any Man love the World, the Love of the Father is not in him. And our Saviour has told us how hard it is for them that truſt in Riches, to enter into the Kingdom of God. And therefore to neglect a Duty, bound upon them in order to their own and other Mens Salvation, becauſe they find it inconſiſtent with their Trade and ſecular Intereſt, is in plain Terms to quit Pretenſions to any World but this, to make a poſitive Choice of their Intereſt here, in oppoſition to any Hopes hereafter. And what if I ſhould ſay, that even in Point of Prudence and worldly Policy they are very much out in their Meaſures? It is the Bleſſing of the Lord that maketh Rich, ſays Solomon, who, I ſuppoſe, was wiſer than the wiſeſt of theſe cautious Magiſtrates; and with what Face can that Man expect a Bleſſing from God, who purſues his aim at Riches by conniving at Affronts that are every Day offered to God and to Religion? God does indeed ſometimes proſper wicked Men, becauſe they have choſen their Portion in this Life. Yet the wiſeſt and moſt likely Way, in general, to ſecure the Bleſſing of God upon our Trade, is firſt to make ſure of a good Conſcience, and then all other things needful for us will be added. God does often remarkably bleſs ſuch ſuch as have ſuffered, or are prepared in their Minds to ſuffer all Difficulties that may happen, rather than neglect their Duty to Him. He has increaſed their Trade and their Riches (as he bleſſed Abraham offering his Son) when he found them ready to be ſacrificed with a cheerful Obedience to his Command. But whether he do ſo or not, they have an Inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, that fades not away, reſerved in Heaven for them; and there they ſhall have ſufficient amends for all they have loſt, and abundant Intereſt for all they have laid out for God.

Gen. 22. 12, 16.

1 Pet. 1. 4.

Eug. I have ſome few Scruples yet remaining. The good Will and Affection of one's Neighbourhood, is what a Gentleman and a Chriſtian, may and ought to value: Now I'm ſenſible this Work will draw upon me a great deal of Hatred and Contempt.

Obj. XLII.

Th. That Man is but half a Philoſopher, and but half a Chriſtian, who has not learnt to bear Contempt and Hatred in a good Cauſe. Conſidering the general Wickedneſs of the World, you muſt aſſuredly expect ſuch Trials. Whoever ſets about to reduce Impiety will be hated: but by whom? By no good Man. Whoever has a ſerious Senſe of Religion will applaud and love you for it: For he himſelf diſapproves in his Mind, and condemns by his own virtuous Example the ill Practices you puniſh. All ſober Men will be ſenſible that you are acting for the public Honour of God and Chriſtianity in ſuppreſſing Prophaneneſs, and all wiſe Men will be ſenſible that you are doing a public Service to the State, in ſuppreſſing Extravagance and Exceſs. Indeed thoſe guilty Perſons, who are by your Means to be torn from the Enjoyment of their Vices, or ſuffer for them, will agree to hate you: And where's the Wonder in this? while you adhere to the Laws, it is not to be expected, that the Offenders ſhould be on your Side. So that your Objection iſſues in this, That the Friends of Religion and Virtue will be pleaſed with what you do; but the vicious and immoral will be ſure to malign you for it. For my Part, I am ſeriouſly of Opinion, that, next to the Favour of God, one of the greateſt Bleſſings a good Man

Man has to wiſh for in this World, is, to enjoy the Spleen and Hatred of ill Men; as it is a certain Evidence he is not of their Tribe, that he walks not in the Counſel of the Ungodly, nor ſtands in the Way of Sinners. For ſays our Saviour, if ye were of the World, the World would love its own; but becauſe ye are not of the World --- therefore the World hateth you. Where two or three particular Perſons only hate a Man, there may be ſomewhat of perſonal Quarrel in the Caſe, wherein his Virtue and Goodneſs are not immediately concerned: But when the whole Party of Wickedneſs is up in Arms, her Horſe and Foot, her Friends of Quality and the Mob, drawn up againſt him, 'tis plain their Quarrel is at his Goodneſs, and at nothing elſe, whatever they pretend. This is no more than the old Enmity betwixt Vice and Virtue; an unjuſt Man (ſays Solomon) is an Abomination to the Juſt; and he that is upright in the way, is an Abomination to the Wicked; eſpecially if he makes any public Attempts to reform. The World cannot hate YOU, (ſays our Lord to the wicked Jews) but ME it hateth, --- and why? --- Becauſe cauſe I TESTIFIE OF IT, that the WORKS THEREOF ARE EVIL. You ſee the bleſſed Jeſus trod the ſame uneaſie Path before you, and met with the ſame Entertainment you expect; therefore for our Encouragement, he tells his Diſciples; If the World hate you, ye know it hated me before it hated you. Remember the Word that I ſaid unto you, The Servant is not greater than the Lord. If they have perſecuted me, they will alſo perſecute you. And in another Place, ye ſhall be hated of all Men for my Names Sake; but he that endureth to the End ſhall be ſaved: And he that taketh not his Croſs and followeth after me, is not worthy of me. The Fear of Man hindred ſeveral of the Jewiſh Rulers from owning Chriſt, tho' they ſecretly believed in Him: But as I hope you are convinced, that what I have been perſwading you to is your Duty, I hope you will not be afraid to let the World know that you are ſo, nor ever trouble your ſelf with the Proſpect of their Hatred in the Matter, leſt the ſevere Remark upon thoſe Rulers in the Goſpel ſhould equally include you, that they loved the Praiſe of Men more than the Praiſe of God.

If

If you ſet about this Work with a ſincere Zeal for God's Glory, and the Honour of Religion, you may perhaps ſuffer a great deal from malicious Men; they will be ready to do you what ill Turns they can: But don't fear them. You are doing the Work of God; you are following the Example of the bleſſed Jeſus; you are under the particular Guard of Providence, which will ſuffer nothing to befal you, but what will aſſuredly firſt or laſt turn to your Advantage; you have the Love and Approbation of all good Men; and above all, the Favour of your Eternal Judge in Heaven, who will fully recompence there all the Pains you have taken, all the Contempt and Hatred you have undergone for him on Earth: While on the other Side, Evil ſhall ſlay the Wicked, and they that hate the Righteous ſhall be deſolate. Pſal. 34. 21.

Eug. You give me very good Encouragement againſt this Objection; But there is ſtill a material Diſadvantage you have not taken Notice of. If I gain the ill Will of my Neighbours, I ſhall not be able to do them any Good; their Prejudice againſt me will Obj. XLIII.

will be ſuch, that I may provoke, but never ſhall reform them.

Th. This Prejudice, I ſuppoſe, will be grounded only upon your appearing in the Execution of the Laws againſt them for their Vices: Take all the Care you can, by Prudence and good Nature, to prevent all other Occaſions of Diſtaſt. But ſince they have plainly hitherto been Proof againſt the Fear of Hell, the Authority of the ſacred Scriptures, and the repeated Exhortations of the Pulpit, 'tis evident this is the only way left that carries in it any Hope or Proſpect of reforming them. If this won't do, or if it ſours to Prejudice in their Minds, 'tis a Sign the Malignity of the Diſtemper is very great; and as this is the laſt Method of Cure, you have ſo much the greater Obligation to go on with it, and to try the utmoſt it can do. If after all, it prove to no purpoſe, yet the Fault is none of yours; tho' they will not be reformed by it, they would not be reformed without it. But further, the Prejudice they conceive againſt you at firſt will wear off in courſe of time, in ſpite of all their preſent Heat, when when they ſee you reſolved to go on, not caring for any thing they can ſay or do againſt you. Malice diſregarded is the moſt impertinent ſilly thing imaginable; when it loſes its End, (which was to fill you with Reſentment and Trouble, and to awe you into an Alteration of your Meaſures) 'tis too much out of Countenance to ſtay long, or gradually dies away under the Mortification of ill Succeſs.

Eug. But in the mean time my Reputation will lye expoſed to all the Ridicule and Scandal they can throw upon it. I ſhall be at the Mercy of the Mob, who will be ſure to raiſe an Hundred Falſhoods of me, which are not ſo eaſily call'd in when they are once ſtarted and diſpers'd, as perhaps the Prejudice may be that gave them Birth. Obj. XLIV.

Th. You are miſtaken, my Friend; ſuch ſilly Stories will be very ſhort-lived. They will find no Credit with Men of Senſe and Honour that know you, becauſe your every Day's Converſation confutes them. They may indeed for a while be current amongſt ſuch as don't affect you; but when they

they have been told three or four times over, and the merry World has had its Laugh, they loſe their Reliſh, and are laid aſide of Courſe. If they be of a ſcandalous Nature, or if they charge you with any thing that touches your Honour and your Conſcience, 'tis fit you ſhould conſider, whether you are guilty or not. For this Advantage (and a very great one) you will have, that ſetting up for the Reformation of others, you will be ſure to hear of all your own Faults; whatever the World knows of, that can be ſaid to reproach you, will be told without a Whiſper. And this, as it may alarm you to a ſeaſonable Repentance, if you be guilty, may prove the kindeſt Office that could be done you; and as it may put you in Mind of ſeveral Failings which, perhaps, you did not attend to or conſider before, ſo it will be an uſeful Hint to you to correct them. Reform your ſelf with all the Exactneſs and all the Speed you can, that you may be able to keep your Countenance in reforming Others.

Eug. Whether they have any thing in my preſent Conduct to expoſe me for, or not, they will rip up all my old Vices, Vices, (which, I thank God, I have long ſince left and repented of) and rather than fail, even the trifling Imprudences of Youth, and the common Failings of Mankind.

Th. You muſt expect they will. But if they ſtart a Charge againſt you of ſomething that was done long ſince, and you have already repented, and wholly laid aſide the Practice, you need not be aſhamed to hear of it again from your Enemies; becauſe you are now a very different Perſon from what you was then, of quite a different Principle and Behaviour: And they may as well reproach a Man for having been a Child, as a good and virtuous Man for having formerly been otherwiſe.

Eug. But how ſhall I fence my ſelf againſt direct and poſitive Falſhoods raiſed to diſcredit me?

Th. By diſproving them. If you know your own Innocence, confute the Scandal in ſome public Company, and in private ſatisfie all you can that it is a Falſhood; becauſe the Imputation of Vice to one that ſets up for reforming it, is of the laſt ill Conſequence, if you ſuffer it quietly to prevail vail and be believed; as it makes the whole Undertaking you are upon look like a meer hypocritical Scheme for Reputation or Self-Intereſt. But after all, what are you your ſelf the worſe for any Scandals raiſed upon you. You are not to look upon your ſelf as you do upon ſaleable Commodities, that riſe and fall by the Market-Price: You are not to judge your ſelf by the uncertain Opinion of the Vulgar, who, as they never think upon ſteady Principles, can never be long of the ſame Mind, or frame a regular Judgment of any thing. What is it that really makes a Man worſe, but Guilt; or better, but an Encreaſe of Virtue? Theſe are the only ſolid Standards by which a Philoſopher, when he weighs himſelf, debates his own Character; becauſe the Conſequence of theſe is for Eternity: All other Topicks of Eſteem or Diſeſteem are computed only with relation to this preſent World, and the Computers differ in their Computation too. So then, if you are innocent of what's laid to your Charge, you're never the worſe Man for the Charge being laid. Nay,

Nay, the beſt Men have frequently undergone the vileſt Scandals. Our Saviour was called an Impoſtor, a Glutton, a Drunkard, a Patron of Wickedneſs and wicked Men; yet his being falſly called ſo, did not leſſen him at all. David was levelled at by his Enemies much after the ſame Rate; Every Day they wreſt my Words: all their Thoughts are againſt me for Evil. They gather themſelves together, they hide themſelves, they mark my Steps when they wait for my Soul. The Prophet Jeremiah too; For ſince I ſpake, ſays he, [and told them of their Faults,] the Word of the Lord was made a Reproach unto me, and a Deriſion daily. I heard the Defaming of many; — Report, ſay they, and we will report it; all my Familiars watch'd for my Halting, &c. The Apoſtles had the ſame Treatment, and were forced, in the Duty they were called to, to charge through Honour and Diſhonour, thro' good Report and evil Report; accounted as Deceivers, yet knowing themſelves to be True. And what were they the worſe for this? They are now in the Enjoyment of Eternal Happineſs, which their Defamers (except they repented) never ſhall attain to. If being ſcandalized for the Sake of Virtue make any Alteration, 'tis much for the better to us. If ye be reproached for the Name of Chriſt, (ſays St. Peter) happy are ye. If any Man ſuffer as a Chriſtian, let him not be aſhamed. Our Saviour pronounces the ſame,— Bleſſed are ye, when Men ſhall revile you, and ſhall ſay all Manner of Evil againſt you falſly for my Name's Sake: Rejoice and be exceeding glad, for great is your Reward in Heaven. On the other ſide, if the Favour and good Word of wicked Men come under any Conſideration with us, we ought to look upon it as the moſt real and effectual Scandal in the World; what elſe does our Saviour mean when he ſays, Wo unto you when all Men ſpeak well of you; for ſo did their Fathers of the falſe Prophets; and ſo will they of negligent or vicious Magiſtrates, under whom they may quietly enjoy themſelves in Wickedneſs. To ſum up the Evidence then, I think you will have no Reaſon to be angry at thoſe that defame you for doing your Duty in this matter, if it draw down a Bleſſing from God upon you, and will ſtrengthen

Eug. If the Point of Reputation were all, I ſhould perhaps be ſatisfied with this Diſcourſe: But the Juſtice of Peace and the Conſtable do both of them run a greater Hazard, they go in Danger of their Lives. Obj. XLV.

Th. This Objection ſeems to carry more Strength than really it does. For in the firſt Place, tho' it's true, the Magiſtrate and inferior Officers have to do in theſe Caſes with ſome of the worſt of Mankind, ſuch as are abſolute Strangers to Conſideration and Conſcience; yet I can't allow that there is indeed ſo much Danger of Life in the Execution of our Office upon them, as timorous People apprehend: Both becauſe the Protection of God ſeems more eſpecially engaged on our ſide, when we are doing his own Work, acting by his Authority and Command, and for his Glory, and this in a Regular, Legal, and Chriſtian Way, without any thing of Rudeneſs in our Behaviour, or giving ill Men any further Provocation than the bare Execution of our Duty: And alſo becauſe in Fact there has no ſuch thing happened to them, (except one Inſtance only of the Conſtable killed in May-Fair in London,) ever ſince the Reformation-Societies were ſet up; yet many Thouſands of lewd and deſperate Perſons have been convicted and brought to Puniſhment by them. The Conſtables, by order of the Juſtices, have gone about to the Taverns and Public-Houſes in their Ward, and unqueſtionably found there very often the moſt diſſolute Bullies in the Kingdom, who wanted not the Will to have murdered them, if the reſtraining Providence of God, for the Protection of his Servants in this Work, had not diſarmed their Malice by a ſudden Damp upon their Spirits. In the Country, I thank God, we are ſtill leſs in Danger from ſuch Men, as we have fewer of them amongſt mongſt us: and thoſe we have, if they were inclined to be miſchievous, could not hope to eſcape ſo eaſily as in a large and populous City. If you will ſuppoſe any of them ſo deſperate in Malice as to attempt ſuch a Thing, with the apparent and determined Hazard of dying for it themſelves upon the Gallows, and all this only to revenge the Quarrel of their Vices; why then do the Officers of Juſtice want Courage to venture their Lives in the Courſe of their Duty, arm'd with the Authority of the Law, a good Cauſe, and a good Conſcience? Shall a wicked Wretch ſacrifice his Life to the Devil with more Reſolution than we dare offer ours to God? But however, the Enemies you are afraid of (depend upon it) have not Courage enough to attempt the twentieth Part of what they talk. Indeed, ſo far as noiſie Curſes and Threatnings and the artificial Bravery of Words will go, we muſt own them to be ſomewhat terrible: But go you reſolutely on in your Office, put it to the Trial what they dare do in good Earneſt, and you will find them very contemptible;

all this mighty Flaſhing is but falſe Fire, and they the greateſt Cowards in the World.

Eug. But ſome time or other, in the Heat of Wine, they may do what in cool Blood they durſt not venture on.

Th. Perhaps they may, when they have a lucky Chance of Courage more than ordinary, and perhaps they may effect their Villany too. I will ſuppoſe the utmoſt your Objection would have, that you go in continual Danger of your Life; yet I hope to convince you, that the Apprehenſion of this ought to be no Bar to the vigorous Execution of your Office. For to what End did the Almighty give you Life, but that you ſhould glorifie him with it? And if endeavouring by all proper Methods to ſecure his Honour, and the Honour of Religion againſt Immorality and Prophaneneſs, be not directly within the Notion of glorifying God, I am willing to give up the Cauſe: But if it be, the loſing your Life in the Service is no more than diſpoſing of it to the very Ends for which it was given you. You glorifie him ſo much the more in dying for the Diſcharge of your Duty, as by this reſolute Conſtancy in his Service, even to the laſt Extreams of Oppoſition, you publickly give your Suffrage, that his Favour and his Honour are to be regarded above all earthly Conſiderations whatſoever. I will add, that it entitles you to the Reward of Martyrdom, which the Primitive Chriſtians were ſo ambitious of. Be thou faithful to the Death, and I will give thee a Crown of Life, ſays Chriſt. A Martyr is one who, at the Expence of his Blood, atteſts the Truth, and Excellence, and Purity of Chriſt's Religion, and maintains to the laſt (in ſpite of all the Violence of wicked Men,) his Obligation to profeſs and practiſe it. Now as the Subſtance of Religion * which God chiefly inſiſts upon, is rather the Zeal of a good Life than of an Orthodox Profeſſion, why ſhould not our Sufferings for promoting Virtue and ſubſtantial Goodneſs be as dear to Him, as thoſe of a Miſſionary for Preaching, or his Converts for receiving the Chriſtian Faith and Doctrine? And why may we not as juſtly reckon him a Martyr who dies in that

Eug. But Life is naturally ſweet; and the Thoughts of parting with it, when in the common courſe of Nature we might hope to enjoy it ſome Years more, go hard with any Man.

Th. Nothing can happen to us, but by the Will of God: And therefore as we are to reſign our ſelves entirely to Him that made us, we are to conclude beforehand againſt any Prejudices of Self-love or worldly Intereſt to what he thinks fit to determine concerning us, either as to the Time or Manner of our Diſſolution. When we have done what Good we can, the End of our Living is anſwered; and if God removes us from our Work to our Reward, is this an Injury? Are the Miſeries of humane Life ſo inconſiderable, that we are loth to change them for a bleſſed Eternity? What Buſineſs is there in which we Luke 12. 43. can expire with more true Satisfaction, and to better Advantage, than that for which we were born? Or have we our ſelves, for any Temporal By-conſiderations of our own, a juſter Propriety in our Lives, than he for whoſe Service we were made to live? The Example of Chriſt is very often recommended to us in the New Teſtament, that we ſhould follow his Steps; that we ſhould Love one another as he has loved us; By this, ſays he, ſhall all Men know that ye are my Diſciples: And is it poſſible for us more cloſely to imitate him, than when we die for the Sake of glorifying God and doing Good to Men? eſpecially in that religious Charity of reforming the Vices of Men, and ſetting them in the Way to Heaven. Hereby perceive we the Love of God, becauſe he laid down his Life for us, and we ought to lay down our Lives for the Brethren, where a neceſſary Charity to them expoſes our own Lives to Hazard:

Eug. Not to interrupt you, Theotimus; Is not every Man bound to preſerve his own Life, and not to draw down Sufferings upon himſelf and his Family?

Th. Yes certainly, where Life and the Performance of our Duty to God and Man are conſiſtent with each other. But when the Caſe ſtands ſo, that we muſt muſt either neglect that Duty, or hazard Life in the Performance, you will find, that whatever Nature may

Mat. 10. 28. ſinful Compliance, we can propoſe no more than the Enjoyment of a few toilſome Years in the trifling and uncertain Favour of ill Men, and Comforts blaſted by the Curſe of God; for the Sake of which we loſe the moſt important Bleſſings of his Love, and forfeit our Hopes of Happineſs to come: Whereas on the other Side, if we employ our ſelves, without Fear of any thing but God, in the Practice of keeping a good Conſcience, and promoting Virtue; what Violence ſoever may be offered by the Barbarity of ſuch as hate to be reſtrained, the God of Heaven will receive us with triumphant Joy, and crown us with Eternal Life. For bleſſed are the Dead which die in the Lord,--- that they may reſt from their Labours, and their WORKS DO FOLLOW them. Rev. 14. 13.

Eug. One Word before we leave this Argument, in behalf of the Conſtables, who depending generally upon their Trade, the loſing of their Lives may be the Ruine of their Families.

Th. The Conſtable, I think, is not ſo much in Danger (upon ſome Accounts) as the Juſtice of Peace. For tho' it's true, he is the immediate Officer that gives the Diſturbance to Vice, yet 'tis underſtood that he does it in Obedience to the Juſtice's Order, who would puniſh him if he did not. But granting that he ſuffers for obeying this Order, what will follow? That his Family ſhall be ruined by it. If that ſame Man was to die of an ordinary Diſtemper, there would not be half this Outcry of Ruine to his Wife and

and Children, and yet there would be full as much Occaſion for't. His dying a violent Death does not leave his Family one Groat the poorer than if he had died in his Bed. You'll ſay it takes him off ſooner than ordinary; he might have been bleſſed with Life and Health much longer, to have wrought for his Family, and ſeen his Children brought up. People never want Reaſons againſt dying, all Ages have ſome Pretence or other to make it unſeaſonable. But how do they know he would have lived to do theſe things for his Family, if he had not been murdered in the Cauſe of Reformation? As ſtrong and as healthy Men as he have dropped off ſuddenly in the midſt of their Years. Perhaps it might not have been a Month, or not a Week, before a Fever had ſeized him, or ſome other Diſtemper carried him to his Grave. Or if he might have lived many Years, and his Trade have anſwered Expectation, and his Family have been by that Means well provided for, when the poor Man happens to be thus untimely cut off by an Aſſaſſin: If he dare not leave them to ſo good a Guar-

Guardian as God's Providence, (whoſe Bleſſing he entails upon them by dying in his Service,) where's the Faith and Generoſity of a Chriſtian? Dare he not truſt God to provide for them, as well as his own Induſtry? But however, a Conſtable ought to conſider himſelf as actually liſted and ſworn into the Service of his Prince and Country, during his Year; and his Office calls him upon ſeveral Occaſions to venture his Life in the Execution of it, at the Command of his Prince and the ſubordinate Magiſtrate whom he is to obey. He is to part Affrays, diſperſe Riots, ſeize Murderers, High-way-men, and the moſt deſperate Felons: And why is not the Outcry made of Ruine to his Family upon the Hazard of his Life on any of theſe Occaſions? He is to look upon ſuch Hazards as the neceſſary Incumbrance of his Office, when he is ſworn into it; and therefore why ſhould he be afraid of his Life in the Execution of the Laws, when the Execution of the Laws is the very Buſineſs he has undertaken? But the Truth is, our Conſtables (eſpecially in the Country) have leſs Stomach to the Work of Reformation, than to any other Part of their Duty; an Averſion moſt unworthy of the Authority they bear, and of the Truſt repoſed in them, and a Time will come when they ſhall repent it. I have only this to ſay further, That 'tis their Intereſt every way, to do their Duty willingly, and with the religious Zeal that becomes them in ſo good a Work. For then let the worſt happen to them that can, they leave the Care of Heaven engaged for the Good of their Families, and need not queſtion but their Children will be well provided for; much better perhaps than by their Induſtry and Succeſs in Trade; eſpecially if the Increaſe be tainted with the ill Conſcience of neglecting their Duty for the Sake of it. But if they act unwillingly and grudgingly, Religion and Virtue will not be much concerned to thank them, and God will take as little Notice to reward them.

Eug. You have exceedingly obliged me, Theotimus, by your Patience in hearing and anſwering my Objections. I will trouble you with but Three or Four more, and then I have done.

done. You know a Magiſtrate can do little except Informations be brought him; his own Inſpection will go but a little way. Now as we can't compel any Body to inform, no Body's very forward to give themſelves that Trouble. Obj. XLVI.

Th. It's true, an Informer is the Magiſtrate's Eye, as the Conſtable is his Hand in puniſhing; yet ſomething may be done by his own Inſpection. If you be vigorous, as a Chriſtian Magiſtrate ought to be, in puniſhing Perſons of all Ranks that ſwear or curſe in your Hearing, or whom you ſee drunk, or guilty of any other Immorality puniſhable by the Laws, it will ſtrike a general Awe into Vice wherever you come, and give ſo much Spirit, ſuch a public Countenance to Virtue, as will encourage ſeveral to come to you (privately at leaſt) with Informations. It may encourage good Men perhaps to form themſelves into Societies for this Purpoſe, (as has been done in ſo many Places with glorious Succeſs) when they find a Magiſtrate in the Neighbourhood ready to receive them, and conſcientious and ſevere againſt Vice, within within the Compaſs of his own Inſpection. In a Word, you need not want Informations, if you take Care to countenance them. Where a Perſon comes to inform, as you have Reaſon to think, not out of any malicious or ſecular Deſign, but purely aiming at the Honour of God and Religion in ſuppreſſing Vice, give him, as in all Conſcience you ought, all proper Encouragement, and that will bring you more; for one will take Heart from the Reception that another finds. As to the Hint you give, that no Body is bound to inform, I grant it, if you mean no more than that they are not compellable by Law to do ſo. But every Man is obliged in general, upon his Duty to God, and the Reverence he owes to his Name and his Religion, to inform the Magiſtrate againſt Vice and Prophaneneſs, that they may be puniſhed. See how ſtrictly God commanded the Iſraelites, if a Father or a Mother ſhould entice them to Idolatry, that their Eye ſhould not pity, neither ſhould they ſpare, neither ſhould they conceal, but bring them out that they might die for it. And all Iſrael ſhall hear and fear

fear (ſays the Text) and ſhall do no more any ſuch Wickedneſs among you. You ſee that even the neareſt Relation in Blood, (and much leſs any Obligations in Friendſhip, Intereſt or Dependance) was not to excuſe them from informing againſt wicked Men, and bringing them to be made public Examples, by ſuffering the Puniſhment of the Law. Now tho' the Way of puniſhing ſuch by Stoning, was particular to the Jewiſh Conſtitution, yet that they ſhould be puniſhed, and in order to that, informed againſt, is plainly moral, and continues to oblige (as every other moral Part of the Law of Moſes does) to the End of the World. For by the Reaſon of the thing 'tis evident; the beſt Laws in the World being to no manner of Purpoſe, if no Body will inform againſt thoſe that break them, ſo as to keep alive the Spirit and Execution of thoſe Laws, Informations are (for any thing I know) full as neceſſary to good Government, as either Laws or Magiſtrates; and therefore 'tis as much the Duty of Subjects to inform, as of Magiſtrates to puniſh. The Queen accordingly in

Her Proclamation, ſtrictly charges and commands, not only Her Juſtices of the Peace and other Officers, Eccleſiaſtical and Civil, but, "ALL "OTHER HER SUBJECTS "WHOM IT MAY CONCERN, "to be very vigilant and ſtrict in the "Diſcovery and effectual Proſecuti-"on and Puniſhment of Drunken-"neſs, prophane Swearing and Cur-"ſing, Blaſphemy, Lewdneſs, Prophana-"tion of the Lord's-Day, &c. as they will anſwer it to Almighty God. And who, do you think, can poſſibly be meant by thoſe other Subjects whom it may concern, but every private Subject who is preſent when any of theſe Offences is committed, and is by conſequence able to make Oath againſt the Offender, that he may be puniſhed as the Law directs? In Truth, the general Mildneſs and Tenderneſs of the Engliſh makes them averſe to bring one another to Puniſhment (tho' in the Caſes we are now talking of, the Penalties are very ſmall and inconſiderable). And this good Nature has made us almoſt ridiculous in Foreign Countries, as having the beſt Laws to the leaſt Purpoſe of any Na-

Nation under Heaven. So that thoſe who (as you ſay) will not give themſelves the Trouble to inform, are guilty of ſhutting their Eyes againſt the Authority of Scripture, and the Suggeſtions of Reaſon, and the Commands of a Royal Proclamation; they are guilty of bringing Contempt upon our Government, and what's more, the Judgments of God upon their Country; they are guilty alſo by too juſt an Imputation of all the Oaths, and Curſes, Lewdneſſes, Prophanations of the Lord's-Days, exceſſive Drinking, and other diſſolute Practices, which they tamely hear and ſee committed by others, without giving themſelves the Trouble to inform of; at leaſt where there is no Opportunity for private Admonition, or where it has been tried to no Purpoſe.

Eug. What chiefly frights Men from informing, is the vulgar Scandal that lies upon it; the Name is odious.

Th. I own there are Informers who deſerve to be odious, and ever will be ſo; ſuch as inform out of Malice to the Perſon, or Greedineſs of Reward. And the general ill Character theſe Men have brought upon the Practice, the Devil has artfully improved to the very great Diſſervice of Religion: For by this Means he has brought Men not to diſtinguiſh in Favour of thoſe who from a pious Principle of Zeal for God and Virtue, give Informations againſt Prophaneneſs and Immorality, tho' they keep at the utmoſt Diſtance from either Spleen or Avarice, and has prepoſſeſs'd too many good Men with Fear of ſuch an unpopular Work, and too many others with an unchriſtian Careleſneſs. MALICE, I hope, ſeldom is (I'm ſure it never ought to be) the Principle of ſuch Informations; and where it is, I own it to be highly odious, tho' the Cauſe of Virtue be pretended; and the Magiſtrate ought to diſcountenance it. And COVETOUSNESS OF REWARD I think cannot poſſibly be the Principle; becauſe the Money levied for Offences of that kind is diſpoſed of, by the ſeveral Statutes, to the Poor of the Pariſh, except thoſe upon 3 Car. 1. c. 1. and 29 Car. 2. c. 7. in ſome Caſes of Prophanation of the Lord's-Day, which the Juſtice of Peace has a Power of Dividing, two thirds to the Poor, and one

one to the Informer; 'Tis lawful for him ſo to divide it, but the Statute does not command him; nor can I hear that ever ſuch a Dividend was made, or ever deſired; and ſuppoſe it was, the Penalties are too ſmall, and the Advantage too trifling, to make a Trade of. But be this as it will, the Offender is not puniſhed but upon clear and certain Evidence; and why ſhould the Informer's Reputation, or the Credit of his Action, ſuffer upon bare Surmiſes? The Principles Men act upon are to be warily cenſured, becauſe they are not equally viſible with what they do; and therefore Charity (which St. Paul ſays, hopes all things, believes all things,) ſhould teach us where there is an Appearance and Profeſſion of a good Deſign, not to ſuſpect, without a very convincing Evidence, a bad one. Now when a Man informs againſt Prophaneneſs and Vice, and (for any thing that appears to the contrary) out of a ſerious Regard to Virtue and Religion, we muſt judge that Information good and honourable, ſo long as Virtue and Religion are ſo. The Jewiſh Princes did not think it below

Ezra 9. 1. them to inform Ezra of the Irregularities of the People, in order to a Reformation: And I heartily wiſh our Men of Quality at home, would lay the Honour of God more to Heart than generally they do, and both ſet a good Example themſelves, and bring to Puniſhment thoſe that ſet an ill one. Nothing can add more Honour to their own Character than thus to diſcountenance Vice, the meaneſt and moſt diſhonourable thing in the World; and nothing throws a greater Reflexion upon Zeal for God and Virtue, than that our great Men too generally think themſelves above it.

Eug. There might be others, poſſibly, who would bring Informations, with a very honourable and good Deſign, if they did not fear by this Means to loſe the Intereſts of their Trade and the Friendſhip of their Neighbourhood.

Th. But this may be provided againſt by concealing the Names of ſuch Informers as you have no Reaſon to ſuſpect of Malice in what they do. This you may do if you pleaſe, for any thing in our Laws to the contrary, except the Offender will traverſe, and inſiſt upon a Trial at Law, (which will never be worth his while, to ſave a trifling Penalty, or to know his Accuſer,) and then indeed you muſt produce your Witneſs, but you need not till the Trial actually comes on.

Eug. But ſome will tell you, that 'tis a great Injuſtice to condemn a Man upon an Accuſation that comes from he knows not whom: There ſeems to be a Right of Equity, that he ſhould be conven'd, and know his Accuſer. Obj. XLVIII.

Th. I am not ſatisfied that any ſuch Claim can be founded in the Law of Nature or common Equity. For (1) The Perſon accuſed can challenge no Advantage in Point of Equity, when he pretends to clear himſelf, but ſuch as may be ſome way or other material towards his Defence. Now the Place where and Time when his Fault is ſaid to have been committed, are material to that Purpoſe, (perhaps he can prove he was not there that Day, but in another Place;) theſe therefore he has a Right to know; and accordingly the Juſtice of Peace's Warrant acquaints him with them. But the Name of his Accuſer will be of no good Uſe to him at all; for what Defence can he be ſuppoſed to make from that? Is it that he can prove, the Perſon that informs was not in Company with him all that Day? What then? The Accuſer might ſee or overhear his Offence, without being ſeen or taken Notice of by him. In the Streets, the Roads, or Publick-Houſes, People paſs and repaſs, go in and out, when they are not obſerved by every Body there. So that if the Informer ſwears to his Information, he is ſtill to be credited. Will he ſay, 'tis Malice? That, in the firſt Place, is a common Cant; a Plea of Courſe, which every Body makes, and no Body can diſprove; the Accuſer can only deny; and ſo the Conviction (if ſuch a Plea be allowed in bar to it,) muſt be ſuſpended till the Day of Judgment, and nothing can be done upon a Penal Law by any Information at all. In the next Place, 'tis trifling, becauſe it does not neceſſarily affect the Truth of the Evidence. Suppoſe a Man to bear me a Grudge, yet that does not render it incredible, either that I ſhould offend, or that my Enemy ſhould ſee or hear me when I do; ſo that it does not at all clear me of the Fact; but if he takes it upon his Oath, I muſt be ſtill convicted, whether he gives his Information from a good or a bad Principle. If then to know a Man's Accuſer will be of no Advantage to his Defence, I think in Equity he can't inſiſt upon it; his Buſineſs being only to defend himſelf in what is laid to his Charge. But (2) I preſume no Man can have a natural Right to any thing, which (doing him no real Service) will only indulge his Spleen and Revenge, and capacitate him to be vexatious and troubleſome. Now all the Advantage the Offender will have by knowing his Accuſer (and all he aims at by deſiring to know him) is only this, that he may know whom to hate, and whom to do an ill Turn to when he can. And therefore (3) I conclude, that no Man can pretend a natural Right to any thing that may deſtroy the Intention of a good and juſt Law. Now it muſt certainly be contrary to the Intention of the Law, that an innocent Informer ſhould be expoſed to greater Damage than the Offender who is puniſhed:

Yet

Yet this in all likelihood will be the Effect of what you inſiſt upon. For upon the Statutes againſt Vice and Prophaneneſs; the Penalties are very ſmall, the Offender conſequently ſuffers little; and if you diſcover the Informer to him, you give ſuch an imprudent Scope to his Malice, that he by one Means or other ſhall ſuffer twenty, perhaps a hundred times as much for giving the Information, as the Offender for committing the Crime. Upon all theſe Accounts, I think ſuch an Offender has no Injuſtice done him, if his Accuſer be not made known. If after all, he knows himſelf not to be guilty of what is laid againſt him, he has his Remedy by ſuing the Conſtable for the Diſtreſs, and bringing it to common Law, where his Accuſer will be produced in open Court, if that will do him any Service. Nor is ſuch a Concealment of the Informer's Name ſo ſtrange a thing, ſo foreign to all Practice and Approbation as ſome are ready to ſuggeſt; what think you of that Statute ſtill in Uſe in the Univerſity of Oxford, by which when a Perſon is a Third Time denied his Degree, the the Objection againſt him is to be ſecretly alledged before the Vice-Chancellor and Proctors, and the Accuſer is not to be diſcovered? Celato nomine objicientis, are the very Words of the Statute. And yet this is in a much harder Caſe, than the Convictions of Immorality and Prophaneneſs: For here a young Student, after ſeveral Years; and a great deal of Money ſpent upon his Education, is denied a common Favour, which ſhould recommend him to a Profeſſion and Subſiſtence in the World, and has a public Diſgrace put upon him, to his great Damage, and is forced to ſtay a whole Year longer before he can ſtand again for his Degree.

Eug. I acknowledge both your Arguments and your Inſtance to be very much to the Purpoſe: But why ſhall an Offender be convicted before he be ſent for, at leaſt by the Juſtice, and allowed to ſpeak for himſelf?

Th. I ſhall readily grant you, that where Life is called in Queſtion, or the Penalty is exceeding high, and a Man's whole Eſtate perhaps, or a great Part of it, may be forfeited, no Man ought ought to be condemned unheard and this our Laws have provided for by the very Forms of the Process, the Trial being in open Court: But in such Cases as you and I have been talking of, where the Offence is very frequent, the Occasions of Conviction numerous, and the Penalty after all a meer Trifle, our Statutes are not so straitlaced, as to require all the Formalities that are requisite in Impeachments of greater Consequence, but have left us at Liberty (for any thing I can find) whether we will convene the Offender or not, and indeed 'twere next to impossible that we always should. For at that rate, a Justice of Peace (if Convictions be made often enough before him to do any Good) may have a fine time on't, to keep his Chair from Morning to Night, to hear a Pack of Swearers and Drunkards, one after another, wrangle away each of them an Hour or two in silly Apologies and Impertinence, who still must be convicted, if the Fact be sworn to by any one Witness, either before their Faces or behind their Backs. This would be to lay the Suppression of Vice under the greateſt Difficulties and Diſcouragements, to tire the Magiſtrate, to damp the Informer, and double the Coſt to the Offender; for who muſt bear his Charges when he comes before the Juſtice but himſelf? For my Part, I think that, both for his Convenience and your own, you may be excus'd from calling him before you; eſpecially ſince the Law had made you Judge in the Caſe; and if your Witneſs be upon Oath, (as he ought to be) and you think fit to credit him, the Offender has no more in common Juſtice to demand. And as to the honeſt Informer, I think, conſidering the Miſchief it will breed, if you expoſe him, you not only may, but ought in Point of Charity and Juſtice to conceal him; and let it be known abroad, that in all regular Informations you will do ſo.

Eug. But if we ſtill cannot prevail with People to bring us Informations, what muſt we do?

Th. Revenge it upon the common Enemy of Mankind, by being ſo much the more induſtrious and ſevere againſt Vice, wherever you meet with it. If they will give you no Aſſiſtance, do

do what you can without them. In the Caſe of Tipling on the Lord's Day, you may take your Rounds ſometimes in Perſon, and charge the Conſtables along with you, to viſit the Public-Houſes; and where you find Offenders, puniſh them.

Obj. XLIX. Eug. Will not that render the Office and Authority of a Juſtice of Peace contemptible? Our Brethren of the Bench would never forgive me ſuch a Proceeding; they would look upon their own Dignity as affronted and leſſened.

Matt. 20.26, 28 Th. God forbid that any of us ſhould really think it below him (whatever the fooliſh Opinion of the World may be) to take the moſt effectual Care, even by his own perſonal Labour and Attendance, where 'tis neceſſary, to vindicate the Honour of our holy Religion, and ſee thoſe good Laws that provide for it, faithfully and fully executed. That it is ſometimes neceſſary in the preſent Caſe can hardly be denied: When we conſider the Conſtables, as either vicious themſelves, and conſequently in danger to favour and conceal Offences; or however, timorous and dependant, and afraid to do their Duty; if either of theſe, and they be ſent about wholly by themſelves, you will have few (if any) Preſentments made to you by them. And therefore to awe them to their Duty, as well as countenance them in it, and to make the Search effectual to the Reformation intended by it, 'tis very requiſite the Juſtice of Peace himſelf ſhould ſometimes go along with them.

Eug. It will be very troubleſome, Theotimus, to look after theſe things in Perſon. Object. I.

Th. What mighty Trouble can it be, if you are in Health, (and if you be not, 'tis not to be expected,) to take a Walk about your Pariſh, once or twice every Sunday? Would you think it ſo if your worldly Advantage lay at the End of it? If it were to receive Money, or with the Proſpect of doing your ſelf any conſiderable Kindneſs; if it were only for your Health, for your Pleaſure, or to viſit an obliging Friend, would the Labour and Trouble of an Hour's Walk (once in ſeven Days) be look'd upon as Reaſon ſufficient to ſtay at home? And do you pretend to be a

Chriſtian, with this lazy Unwillingneſs to do as much for your eternal Lord and Maſter as you would do for your ſelf?

Eug. You have made me aſhamed of this Objection; therefore pray, Theotimus, ſave me the Expence of bluſhing longer. I have but one thing more to ſay againſt going about in Perſon, and that is, that it expoſes a Magiſtrate to all the Rudeneſs, Inſults, and Affronts that may be expected from a vicious Mob diſturb'd in their Cups.

Object. LI.

Th. I am glad to find your Objections run ſo low; this very weak one is a ſign you're near an End of them. Sir, the Authority of a Magiſtrate and Laws, is what even a Pot-valiant-fellow dares not readily look in the Face. But ſuppoſe he do affront you, you have the Conſtable with you, lay him by the Heels, or bind him over with good Sureties to the Seſſion, where you will be ſure of the Countenance of the Bench againſt all ſuch Inſolences to one of their own Body. Beſide the Concern you your ſelf have in theſe Affronts, you muſt not ſee the Queen's Authority trampled on on at ſuch a rate; in the Execution of your Office, you repreſent her Perſon, and he that inſults you, affronts the Authority by which you act. Make one Example or two, and ſhew your ſelf a Man of Spirit and Reſolution, and you will ſtrike ſuch a Damp into ill People, that (however they may dare to rail at you in private,) they will never venture to affront you publickly.

Eug. I have kept parrying, you ſee, as long as I could, in an ill Cauſe; but you have fought ſo well, that I have now nothing more to do than to ſubmit. I own my Obligation to this Part of the Duty of my Office, and intend, by the Grace of God, to purſue it: Yet I cannot preſently wear off the Remains of Fear which will be ſtill awing and checking me in ſuch an unpopular Attempt.

Th. I have obſerved the true Spring of moſt of your Objections, as you made them, to be this Principle of the Fear of Man, which renders you ſtill uneaſie. That muſt be conquered, or nothing will be done: It will clog all your Reſolutions, tincture all your Meaſures with Partiality, and leave them imperfect and ineffectual; every Step you take in this Work will be a Penance; and tho' you may force your ſelf for a while to continue acting, it will at laſt tire you out, and you will deſiſt with more Triumph and Advantage to Vice, than if you had never begun. By the Fear of Man, I intend ſuch an overgrown Reſpect for the Power and Greatneſs, ſuch a fawning Deſire of the good Opinion and Friendſhip, and ſuch a ſlaviſh Fear of the Diſpleaſure of any Mortal upon Earth, as inclines you to Negligence or Prevarication in what you know your Duty to the God of Heaven requires of you.

Eug. I own, to my Shame, this Definition touches me too near: I cannot wholly clear my ſelf. But 'tis my Temper, and I don't know how to help it.

Th. Some Men indeed, are naturally more timorous than others: But this is a very unhappy Temper for a Magiſtrate, of all Men; becauſe ſtrict Juſtice, Impartiality, and Courage, are what his Office directly calls him to. There may be a great deal in Temper and Conſtitution to make a Man afraid afraid of diſobling in what he is bound to do. But ſo there is in moſt Men to the particular Vices they are guilty of; as Paſſion, Revenge, Lewdneſs, &c. yet every Man, as a Chriſtian, is bound, by all his Hopes of Heaven, to row as vigorouſly as poſſible againſt the Stream of Nature in ſuch Caſes; and by the Grace of God and his own active Endeavours, he may overcome the Difficulty, and introduce contrary Habits. 'Tis the ſame here; the timorous Apprehenſions of Men may be forcibly thrown aſide by Reſolution and the Grace of God, how hard ſoever it may ſeem at firſt to conquer them. But there are other Cauſes, which either give Riſe to, or at leaſt contribute much to ſtrengthen this Fear of Man, which ought to be removed too.

Eug. What are thoſe?

Th. In the firſt Place, want of true Faith, or however, a very weak and imperfect Faith. The Promiſes of God, his Power to protect us, and the Reality of thoſe glorious Hopes in another World, which ought to be the very Life and Spirit of a Chriſtian, and to ſupport him in Cheerfulneſs fulneſs under all the Difficulties of this preſent State, do not make ſo deep, and ſtrong, and ſteady an Impreſſion upon our Minds, as they ſhould do. Could we but keep our Eye intent upon the Inheritance we expect above, the everlaſting Manſions of Happineſs, which God has promiſed to thoſe that love and ſerve him faithfully; could we but fix our ſelves in a ſteady Senſe of God's Sovereign Power, and his exact Veracity; could we but bring our ſelves to depend upon them with ſuch an entire Aſſurance as is due, when the Eternal Governour of the World, the Fountain of all Truth and Power, declares himſelf; we ſhould not be very much affected with what ſo impotent a Creature as Man can do; we ſhould be above thoſe little petty Intereſts that tye us up from pleaſing and obeying God; we ſhould deſpiſe the Frowns of the greateſt Mortal upon Earth, and venture our Lives againſt his Malice, with all the Joy of Martyrdom. For whoſoever is born of God overcometh the World; and this is the Victory that overcometh the World, even our FAITH.

1 John 5. 4.

In

In the next Place, it proceeds from Love of the World, and our ambitious Deſires of riſing higher in it: From hence we grow unwilling to loſe the Favour of thoſe that may help us onward to Preferment, chuſing rather to pleaſe them than God. Another Occaſion of it is our too great Familiarity and Friendſhips with ill Men, whom therefore we know not how to diſoblige. Another is, the converſing with overcautious and fearful Perſons, which you will always obſerve to have a mighty Influence. The laſt I ſhall need to mention, is the Neglect of Prayer to God for the Grace of Courage and Reſolution in our Duty; for every thing that is good, and great, and generous, muſt come from him, without whom we can do nothing. John 15. 5. Phil. 4. 13.

Eug. Whatever the Principle proceeds from, I'm ſenſible 'tis a very miſchievous one, and ought by all proper Means to be curb'd.

Th. You are certainly in the Right, Eugenius; and hardly in any thing is it more miſchievous, than when it reſtrains us from putting in Execution the Laws againſt Immorality and Vice. It contributes to make the Wiſdom of the Nation ridiculous, in providing good Laws for nothing but to ſtuff a Statute-Book: It makes Vice more impudent than if there were no Laws againſt it; for if, by the ſlaviſh Timorouſneſs of Magiſtrates, it can get the upper Hand of Law, and overcome the Fear of that, it has (humanely ſpeaking) broke down the ſtrongeſt Barrier that could ſtop it, and to be ſure will quickly grow inſolent upon ſuch an Advantage: It is further anſwerable for the Ruine of many Families, by Gaming, Tipling, Lewdneſs, &c. which a timely Execution of the Laws might have prevented, if that had not been hindred by this ſervile and unworthy Fear: It brings down alſo the Judgments of God upon the Nation, where no Body has the Courage to do Juſtice againſt thoſe Sins which every Day affront and provoke him.

Eug. I beg you, dear Theotimus, put me into the likelieſt way to get rid of this unhappy Temper. What Method muſt I take to fortifie my ſelf againſt it?

Th. The firſt thing I will preſcribe you, is diligent, fervent and ſerious Prayer

to

to God, that he would inſpirit you with a truly Chriſtian Zeal and Bravery, ſuch as is requiſite to break thro' a Temptation ſo dangerous as the Fear of Man. Depend not upon your own Strength in this great and difficult Work; addreſs your ſelf to God for Prudence and Courage, and by his Help you ſhall prevail. Pſal. 12. 13. In the next Place, reflect upon the Vanity of this World, and all its Favours and Advantages, and what a meer Shadow, a trifling, impotent, inconſiderable Creature Man is, of whom you are afraid. Who art thou, ſays God, that thou ſhouldſt be afraid of a Man that ſhall die, and of the Son of Man that ſhall be made as Graſs, and forgetteſt the Lord thy Maker, that hath ſtretch'd forth the Heavens, and laid the Foundations of the Earth? Iſa. 51. 12, 13. All worldly Preferments, all the various Paſſions and Affections of Men, their Love and Hate, their Cenſure and Applauſe, muſt have an End in Death; at the moſt, they can continue but a few Years, and then be laid aſleep for ever. Conſider your ſelf too as Mortal, and that within a little while you muſt bid adieu to this preſent

Life. Suppoſe your ſelf now expiring, and conſider how little Reaſon there would be to value either the Favour or Diſguſt of Men, the Advantages or Sufferings that muſt be left behind you; neither the Pleaſure of the one, nor Sorrow of the other can have any Influence in the Grave. Do you think that at that ſolemn time, you would not be wiſe enough to look upon all theſe things in a true Light, and deſpiſe them? Will it not then be the trueſt Satisfaction to reflect, that you are going into the Preſence and Enjoyment of that God, whoſe Service and Commands you have preferred before all the tranſitory Dreams of worldly Intereſt and Favour? Will it not on the other Hand be a ſtartling Apprehenſion, if you have acted a contrary Part, that you have denied your God, forfeited his everlaſting Love, and neglected your Duty, for a few periſhing Careſſes of a vicious Neighbourhood, which are now no longer to be enjoyed; but you are called to anſwer at the Bar of an offended and affronted Sovereign, for betraying the Authority which he gave you, and are like to fall under the eternal Anger ger and Reſentments of that Almighty Being, whom you durſt not obey, for Fear of diſobliging a wretched Fellow-Mortal? What is it Man can do? He can be angry, rail, and abuſe you; can do ſome petty Injuries, and it may be, take away your Life, (yet nothing of all this without the Permiſſion of God) and this is the utmoſt he can do. But if to ſave your ſelf theſe trifling Mortifications, you provoke God, by neglecting what you might do to ſerve and glorifie him, there is no Shelter from his avenging Wrath; a miſerable Eternity muſt be ſpent in lamenting this fooliſh Affectation of the good Graces and Eſteem of Men, who indeed may come to ſhare your Puniſhment in Hell; but can never leſſen it. Luke 12. 4, 5.

Therefore another very proper Antidote againſt the Fear of Man, is to conſider, That a Day of Retribution is coming, when the righteous God ſhall recompence Tribulation to them that trouble you, and Reſt to you that are troubled. 2 Theſſ. 1, 6, 7. Luke 18, 2, 8. Conſider the Reward laid up in Heaven for thoſe brave Souls, who in ſpite of all the Diſgrace and Contempt thrown upon them, in ſpite of all the Hatred and Hazards they incur in this World, are neither aſhamed nor afraid to do their Duty.

2 Cor. 4. 17, 18. Theſe light Afflictions, which are but for a Moment (ſays the Apoſtle) work for us a far more exceeding and eternal Weight of Glory; while we look not at the things which are ſeen, but at the things which are not ſeen; for the things which are ſeen are Temporal, but thoſe which are not ſeen are Eternal. And in another Place, If

Rom. 8. 17, 18. ſo be we ſuffer with him that we may be alſo glorified together. For I reckon that the Sufferings of this preſent time are not worthy to be compared with the Glory that ſhall be revealed in us. You ſee how contemptibly the wiſe Apoſtle ſpeaks of all that you can ſuffer here, and how magnificently he repreſents the Proſpect of a good Man beyond the Grave; which, duly conſidered, muſt have a very encouraging Influence againſt the Fear that might otherwiſe obſtruct a good Conſcience.

Another Help to it, is to reflect upon the Sufferings of Chriſt, and how he bore

Heb. 12, 1, 2, 3. them; who for the Joy that was ſet before him endured the Croſs, deſpiſing the Shame, and perſevering ſtill in the good Work which God had appointed him, notwithſtanding all the Contradiction of Sinners.

Remember too, that by the Chriſtian Conſtitution, it is neceſſary for us to bear the Croſs of Chriſt, if we ever pretend to his Reward. All that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, ſhall ſuffer Perſecution; and therefore, No Man ſhould be moved by theſe Afflictions, for (ſays St. Paul) Your Selves know that we are appointed thereto: And 'tis to our infinite Advantage that we are ſo. By ſuffering Contempt and Hatred in the Cauſe of Virtue, we learn to deſpiſe the World, to think more affectionately of Heaven, to turn our Love towards God, to place our Truſt and Dependance only upon Him, and improve our ſelves in the excellent Grace of Humility. In ſhort, we are aſſured that all things work together for Good [by the wiſe and gracious Poovidence of God] to thoſe that love him; and therefore what have you to fear from the Frowns and Malice of ill People, when in effect it is your trueſt Intereſt to enjoy them?

2 Tim. 3. 12. Acts 14. 22.

1 Theſſ. 3. 3.

Encourage your ſelf further with the Examples of other great and good Men, who have run the ſame Race before you. I will inſtance only in Moſes and St.

St. Paul. The Firſt chuſing rather (and a wiſe Choice it was,) to ſuffer Affliction with the People of God, than to enjoy the Pleaſures of Sin for a Seaſon; Eſteeming the Reproach of Chriſt greater Riches than the Treaſures of Egypt: For he had reſpect to the Recompence of Reward, not fearing the Wrath of the King. The latter having mentioned his Afflictions, makes this generous and heroic Proteſtation: But none of theſe things move me, neither count I my LIFE dear unto my ſelf, that I might finiſh my Courſe with Joy.

Heb. 11. 25. Ver. 26. Ver. 27. Acts 20. 24.

The next thing I adviſe you to, is to converſe as often as poſſible with Men of Piety and Courage, and avoid the Timorous. This will be a ſenſible Advantage to you; you will never leave ſuch Company, but with Reſolutions bold and active, and worthy the Courage of a Chriſtian: Whereas timorous Men will fill you with new Scruples; their very Coldneſs is infectious, tho' they ſhould not offer to diſſuade you.

Another Preventive which I would ſeriouſly recommend, is to have Recourſe often in your Mind to the Scripture Promiſes of God's Protection. Truſt to his Providence, which will intereſt tereſt it ſelf for your Safety, whenſoever Suffering will not be an Advantage to you. Submit to his Wiſdom and Goodneſs to order all things for the beſt. Remember the Royal Proverb of King Solomon; the Fear of Man bringeth a Snare; but whoſo putteth his Truſt in the Lord ſhall be ſafe: And the generous Courage of King David; The Lord is on my ſide, I will not fear what Man can do unto me.

Pſal. 55. 22. —— 37. 5. 1 Pet. 5, 7.

Prov. 29. 25.

Pſal. 118. 6. 56. 3, 4, 11.

It will further be of very good Uſe for your Encouragement, if you could gather ſome one or more Reformation Societies about you; if you can prevail with ſuch as you think have a true Senſe of Religion in your Neighbourhood, to meet often to concert the moſt proper Methods for carrying on this difficult Work, and by Converſation and Prayer, to ſtrengthen and encourage one another in bearing thro' all Hazards for that Purpoſe. This, if you think fit to meet with them, will be of great Advantage to you: And if you don't think that convenient; yet as the Aſſurance they have in you, as a Magiſtrate zealous for this good Work, will much encourage them; ſo the very Being and Zeal of ſuch Societies cieties will not a little invigorate and encourage you.

Eug. My dear Friend, I thank you; you have given me full Satisfaction in every thing, and by the Grace of God you ſhall hear in a little time more effectually that it is ſo. I am ſeriouſly reſolved to ſet about it as ſoon as I get home; but as you have promiſed me already your further Advice and Aſſiſtance, as the Caſe requires; ſo you muſt promiſe me your Prayers too, that I may have Strength and Courage to purſue it.

Th. With the utmoſt Pleaſure, dear Eugenius, I promiſe it. I do now, and ever ſhall, pray God to proſper you in ſuch a glorious Undertaking; in which I hope you are prepared to undergo all Hardſhips for the Sake of doing Good, (whatever the raving and diſtempered Patient may ſay of his Phyſician) being ſure of the preſent Happineſs of a good Conſcience, and of the future Reward of everlaſting Glory.
